

ANIA
LITY

THE LIBRARY
OF
THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

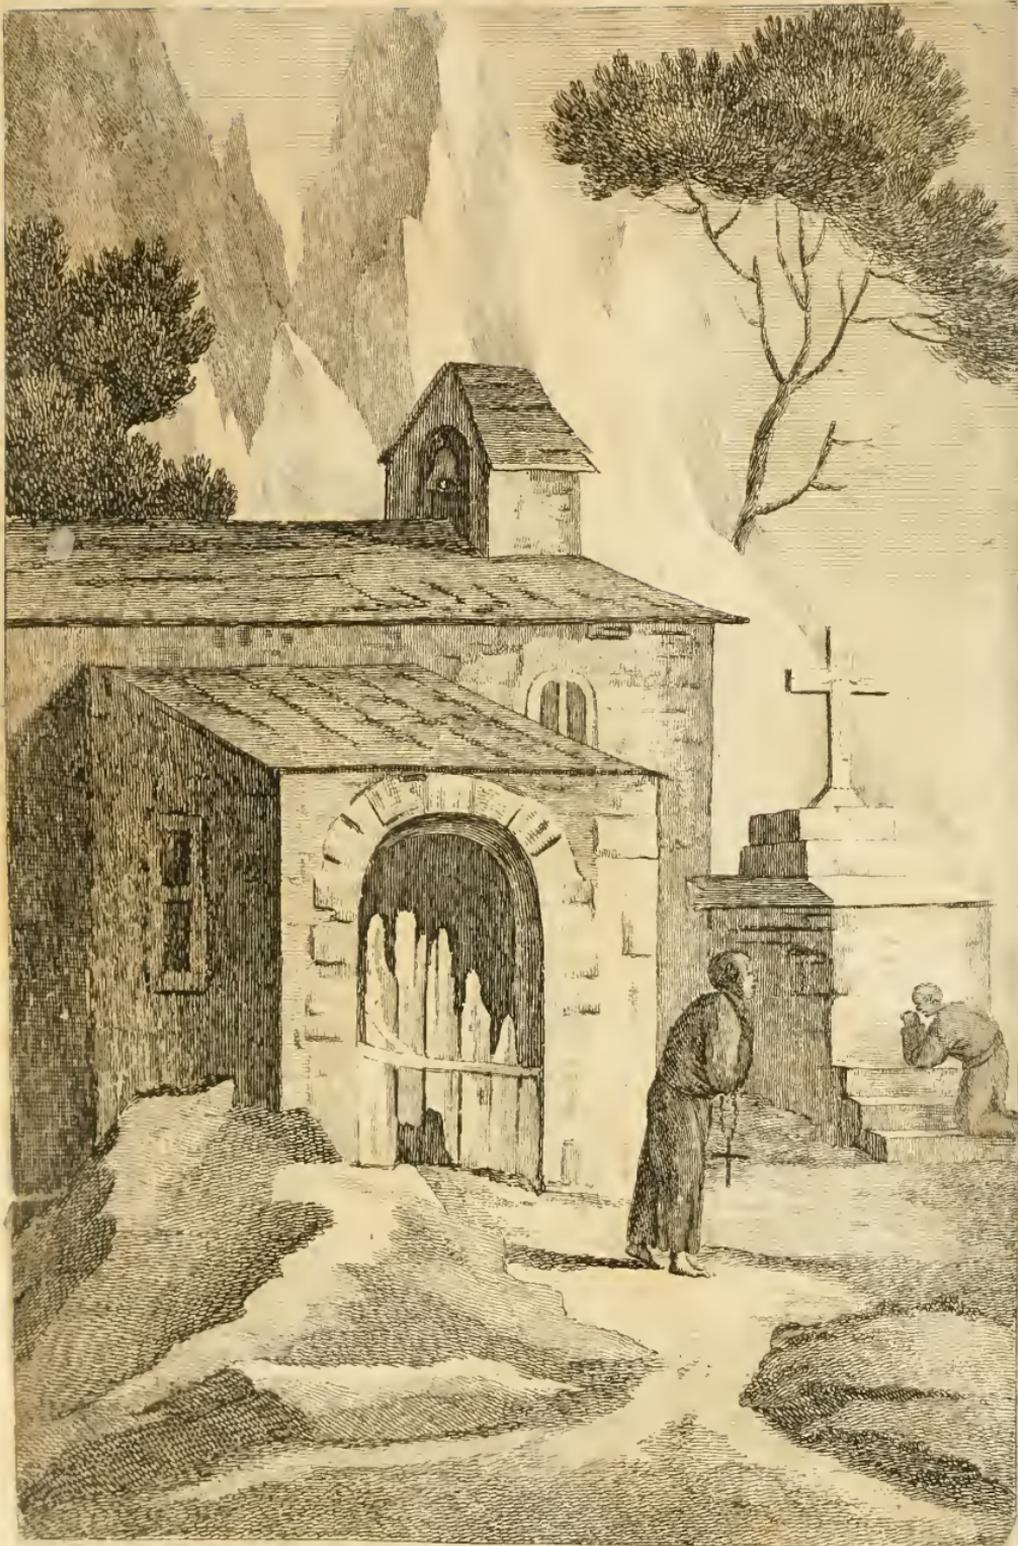

EX LIBRIS

Hint

A YEAR'S JOURNEY

THROUGH

FRANCE,

AND

PART OF SPAIN.

By PHILIP THICKNESSE, Esq.

THIRD EDITION.

VOLUME II.

LONDON:

Printed for WM. BROWN, Corner of Essex Street, Strand.

M.DCC.LXXXIX.

DC 25
T 34 y
1789
V. 2

A JOURNEY, &c.

LETTER XXXV.

NISMES.

S I R,

I AM very certain that a man may travel twice through Spain, and half through France, before he sees a woman of so much beauty, elegance, and breeding, as the mistress of the house I lodge in near this city. I was directed to the house, and recommended to the lady as a lodger; but both were so fine, and superior in all respects to any thing I had seen out of Paris, that I began to suspect I had been imposed upon. The lady who received

VOL. II.

B

me

me appeared to be (it was candle-light) about eighteen; a tall, elegant figure, a beautiful face, and an address inferior to none. I concluded she was the daughter, till she informed me, that Monsieur Saigny, her husband, was gone to Avignon. What added, perhaps, to this lady's beauty in my eyes, or rather ears, was her misfortune——she could not speak louder than a gentle whisper. After seeing her sumptuous apartments, I told her I would not ask what her price was, but tell her what I could afford only to give; and observed, that as it was winter, and the snow upon the ground, perhaps she had better take my price than have none. She instantly took me by the hand, and said, she had so much respect for the English nation that my price was her's; and with a still softer whisper, and close to my ear, said, I might come in as soon as I pleased——“Quand vous voudrez, Monsieur,” said she, with a most bewitching witching smile. We accordingly took possession of the finest apartments, and the best beds I ever lay on. The next day I saw a genteel stripling about the house, in a white suit of clothes, dressed à la militaire, and began to suspect the virtue of my fair hostess, not perceiving for some hours that it was my hostess herself. In the afternoon she made us a visit in this horrid dress—(for horrid she appeared in my eyes)—her clothes were white, with red cuffs and scarlet lappels; and she held in her straddling lap a large black muff as big as a porridge-pot. By this visit she lost all that respect her superlative beauty had so justly entitled her to, and I determined she should visit me no more in man's apparel. When I went into the town I mentioned this circumstance, and there I learnt, that the real wife of Monf. Saigny had parted from him, and that the lady, my hostess, was his mistress. The next day, however, the master arrived; and after being full and finely dressed in brocaded black velvet, he made me a visit, and proffers of every attention in his power: he told me he had injured his fortune, and that he was not rich; but that he had served in the army, and was a gentleman: he had been bred a protestant, but had just embraced the true faith, in order to qualify himself for an employment about the court of the Pope's Legat at Avignon. After many expressions of regard, he asked me to dine with him the next day; but I observed that as he was not rich, and as I paid but a small rent in proportion to his noble apartments, I begged to be excused; but he pressed it so much that I was obliged to give him some other reasons, which did not prove very pleasing ones to the lady below. This fine lady, however, continued to sell us wood, wine, vinegar, fallad, milk, and, in short, every thing we wanted, at a very unreasonable price.

price. At length my fervant, who by agreement made my foup in their kitchen, faid fomething rude to my landlord, who complained to me, and feemed fatisfied with the reprimand I had given the man ; but upon a repetition of his rudeneſs, Monſ. Saigny ſo far forgot himſelf as to ſpeak equally rude to me. This occaſioned ſome warm words, and ſo much ungo- vernable paſſion in him, that I was obliged to tell him I muſt fetch down my piſtols. This he conſtrued into a direct challenge, and therefore retired to his apartments, wrote a card, and ſent it to me while I was walking before the door with a prieſt, his friend and viſitor, and in ſight of the little female captain his ſecond, and all the ſervants of the houſe. On this card was wrote, “ Sir, I accept your propoſition ;” and before I could even read it, he followed his man, who brought it in the true ſtyle of a butler, rather than a butcher, with a white napkin under his arm, and gave it to me with great address. You may be sure I was no more disposed to fight than Monf. Saigny; indeed I told him I would not; but if any man attacked me on my way to or from the town, where I went every day, I would certainly defend myself: and fortunately I never met Monfieur Saigny in the fortnight I staid after in his house; for I could not bear to leave a town where I had two or three very agreeable acquaintance, and one (Monf. Segurier) whose house was filled as full of natural and artificial curiosities, as his head is with learning and knowledge. Here too I had an opportunity of often visiting the amphitheatre, the Maison Quar-rée (so Monfieur Segurier writes it), and the many remains of Roman monuments so common in and about Nismes. I measured some of the stones under which I passed to make the tout au tour of the amphitheatre: they were seventeen feet in length, and two in thickness; and most

most of the stones on which the spectators sat within the area, were twelve feet long, two feet ten inches wide, and one foot five inches deep*; except only those of the sixth row of seats from the top, and they alone are one foot ten inches deep. Probably it was on that range the people of the highest rank took their seats, not only for the elevation, but the best situation for sight and security; yet one of these great stones cannot be considered more, in comparison to the whole building, than a single brick would be in the construction of Hampton-Court palace. When I had the sole possession (and I had it often) of this vast range of seats, and entered the same ADITS which emperors, empresses, Roman knights, and matrons, have so often passed, to see men die wantonly by the hands of

* MAUNDREL, in his journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem, mentions stones sixty feet long, twelve deep, and twelve broad, raised in a wall twenty feet high.

other men, as well as beasts, for their amusement, I could not but with pleasure reflect, how much human nature is softened since that time; for notwithstanding the powerful prevalency of custom and fashion, I do not think the ladies of the present age would plume their towering heads, and curl their borrowed hair, with that glee, to see men murdered by missive weapons, as to die at their feet by deeper, though less visible wounds. If, however, we have not those cruel sports, we seem to be up with them in prodigality, and to exceed them in luxury and licentiousness; for in Rome, not long before the final dissolution of the state, the candidates for public employments, in spite of the penal laws to restrain it, bribed openly, and were chosen sometimes by arms, as well as money. In the senate, things were conducted no better; decrees of great consequence were made when very few senators were present; the laws were

were violated by private knaves, under the colour of public necessity; till at length Cæsar seized the sovereign power; and though he was slain they omitted to recover their liberty, forgetting that

“ A day, an hour, of virtuous Liberty
 “ Is worth a whole eternity of bondage.”

Addison's CATO.

I can almost think I read in the parallel, which I fear will soon be drawn between the rise and fall of the British and Roman empire, something like this:—“ Rome “ had her CICERO; Britain her CAM-“ DEN; Cicero who had preserved Rome “ from the conspiracy of Catiline, was “ banished: CAMDEN, who would have “ preserved Britain from a bloody civil “ war, was removed.” The historian will add, probably, that “ those who brought “ desolation upon their land, did not “ mean that there should be no common“ wealth, but that, right or wrong, they “ should continue to control it:—they “ did

“ did not mean to burn the capitol to “ ashes, but to bear absolute sway in the “ capitol :—The result was, however,
 “ that though they did not mean to over“ throw the state, yet they risked all “ rather than be overthrown themselves ;
 “ and they rather promoted the massacre
 “ of their fellow-citizens, than a recon“ ciliation and union of parties.”—THUS FELL ROME !—Take heed BRITAIN !—
 When the Roman empire was falling, POMPEY and CÆSAR were abhorred by the people, and CURIO, who opposed them, every where received with applause ; while CÆSAR was hated, his greatest opponent BIBLIUS was adored ; and these three,
 once popular men, became the most odious to the people : yet notwithstanding their detested designs were clearly seen through by the people, they prevailed ; as CICERO perceived they could not be prevented without risking a general carnage : for these conspirators against the state had introduced

roduced a great body of foreign foldiers to keep all oppofition quiet ; and Cæfar had the temerity to commit that great and virtuous man CATO, though tribune of the people, to a common prifon, and that too only for difcharging the duty of his office with honour and fidelity. The wretched citizens then faw how the beft men among them were fcornfully treated, and that they had themfelves raifed up the hand which had ftruck them down, never to rife again.

P. S. Dean Swift fays,

———— “ Much rather I fhould die,
“ Than their prediction prove a lie.”

The truth of which in all cafes, we hope and believe, he did not mean to infift upon : but as the above letters were wrote when the civil war in America was but juft begun, and begun in a country of which I had a more perfect knowledge than the miniftry of Great Britain, or the generals

generals sent to conquer it, I ventured, in very strong terms, to point out the impossibility of such an attempt being attended with success. Even MARSHAL SAXE would not in that country have been so good a general as a native captain of a company of rifle-men. The attempt to throw the blame on General Howe is highly illiberal; there cannot be a doubt but that he is a brave man, and an honest man: but a war in America, and a war in Germany, are as unlike in their operations as a battle at sea, or a battle on land; and those who pretend to censure General Sir William Howe, and attribute the want of success to the general's want of courage or conduct, must be knaves or fools. It is with indignation I have read a pamphlet, fabricated by some contemptible tool of a minister, wherein the general's own letters, published in the Gazette, are made use of to shew his own weakness or inability to command. None, but those upon the spot who know the ground, and who see the situation of the enemy, as well as a thousand circumstances not to be gathered, or explained by a letter, which may render things rash in the highest degree, and yet to men at a distance, and unacquainted with military manœuvres, may appear very feasible upon paper, or be made so by an artful, and wicked pamphleteer: none, I say, but such can judge of the general's merit or demerit. I strongly suspect that General Burgoyne's taking Indians into his service, was the cause of his misfortunes, and that the very reverse of what has happened would have been the case, had he not roused the indignation of the whole country against him, by employing men who make no distinction between age, sex, or party. But I should be sorry to say it was so; because General Burgoyne may possibly convince the world that his misfortunes arose from a close obedience to — orders;
the

—orders; which perhaps were given in consequence of ignorance and incapacity. When Captain Mackay saw Admiral Mathews's signal to go down with his fire-ship to burn the Spanish Admiral, and no signal for a ship of force to cover such an attempt; all his men got so drunk, that he was unable to obey those orders; and when the admiral sent an officer in a boat to upbraid him for his neglect, he was unable also to bear it; and therefore blew up his fire-ship, himself, and his drunken crew. A soldier who receives positive orders is to obey them, not to dispute the consequences of obeying them.

LETTER

L E T T E R X X X V I .

ARLES.

I Left Nismes reluctantly, having formed there an agreeable and friendly intimacy with Mr. D'Oliere, a young gentleman of Switzerland, and an edifying and entertaining acquaintance with Monf. Seguiet. I left too the best and most sumptuous lodgings I had seen in my whole tour; but a desire to see Arles, Aix, and Marseilles, &c. got the better of all. But I set out too soon after the snow and rains, and I found part of the road so exceedingly bad, that I wonder how my poor horse dragged us through so much clay and dirt. When I gave you some account of the antiquities of Nismes, I did not expect to find Arles a town fraught with ten times more matter and amusement for an antiquary; but I found it not

not only a fine town now, but that it abounds with an infinite number of monuments, which evince its having once been an almost second Rome. There still remains enough of the amphitheatre to convince the beholder what a noble edifice it was, and to make him wonder why so little, of so large and solid a building, remains. The town is built on the banks of the Rhone, over which, on a bridge of barges, we entered it; but it is evident, that in former days, the sea came quite up to it, and that it was a haven for ships of burden; but the sea has retired some leagues from it many ages since. Beside an hundred strong marks at this day of its having been a sea-port formerly, the following inscription found a century or two ago, in the church of St. Gabriel, will clearly confirm it:

M. FRONTONI EVPOR.
 IIIIVIR AVG. COL. JULIA.
 AVG. AQVIS SEXTIIS NAVICVLAR.
 MAR. AREL. CVRAT EJVSD. CORP.
 PATRONO NAVTAR DRVENTICORVM.
 ET VTRICVLARIORVM.
 CORP. ERNAGINENSIVM.
 JULIA NICE VXOR.
 CONJVGI KARISSIMO.

Indeed there are many substantial reasons to believe, that it was at this town Julius Cæsar built the twelve gallies, which, from the cutting of the wood, to the time they were employed on service, was but thirty days.—That it was a very considerable city in the time of the first emperors, is past all doubt. Constantine the Great held his court, and resided at Arles, with all his family; and the empress Faustina was delivered of a son here (Constantine the younger), and it was long before that, so celebrated for an annual fair held in the month of August, that it was called le noble Marché de Gaules. And Strabo, in his dedication of his book to the emperor, called it, “ Galliarum Emporium non Parvum ;” which is a proof that it was celebrated for its rich commerce, &c. five hundred years before it came under the dominion of the Romans. But were I capable of giving you a particular description of all the monuments of antiquity in and near this town, it would compose a little book, instead of a sheet or two of paper. I shall therefore only pick out a few things which have afforded me the most entertainment, and I hope may give you a little ; but I shall begin with mentioning what must first give you concern, in saying that in that part of the town called la Roquette, I was shewn the place where formerly stood an elevated altar, whereon three young citizens were sacrificed annually, and who were fattened at the public expence during a whole year, for that horrid purpose ! On the first of May their throats were cut in the presence of a prodigious multitude of people assembled from all parts ; among whom the blood of the victims was thrown ; for they weakly imagined, all their sins were expiated by this barbarous sacrifice ; which horrid practice was put a stop to by the first bishop of Arles, ST. TROPHIME. The Jews, who had formerly a synagogue in Arles, were driven out in the year 1493, when that and their celebrated school were demolished. There were found about an hundred years after, among the stones of those buildings, some Hebrew characters neatly cut, which were copied, and sent to the Rabbins of Avignon to be translated, and who explained them thus :

of

Chodesh: Elul. Chameschetb, lamech, vav. Nislamv.
Bedikoth. Schadai.

i. e. they say,

“ In the month of August, five thousand and thirty-
“ six, the Visitation of God ceased.”

Perhaps the plague had visited them.—
There was also another Hebrew inscription, which was on the tomb of a famous Rabbin called Solomon, furnamed the grandson of David.

The amphitheatre of Arles was of an oval form, composed of three stages ; each stage containing sixty arches ; the whole was built of hewn stone of an immense size, without mortar, and of a prodigious thickness : the circumference above, exclusive of the projection of the architrave, was 194 toises three feet, i. e. 1764 French feet, the frontispiece 17 toises high ; the area 71 toises long, and 52 wide ; and the walls were 17 toises thick, which were pierced round and round with a gallery, for the convenience of passing in and out of the seats, which seats would conveniently contain 30,000 men, allowing each person three feet in depth, and two in width ; and yet there remain at this day only a few arches quite complete from top to bottom, which are of themselves a noble monument. Indeed one would be inclined to think think that it never had been completed, did we not know that the Romans left nothing unfinished of that kind; and read, that the emperor Gallus gave some superb spectacles in the amphitheatre of Arles, and that the same amusements were continued by the following emperors. Nothing can be a stronger proof than these ruins, of the certain destruction as well as corruption of all earthly things; for one would think that the small parts which now remain of this once mighty building, would endure as long as the earth itself. But what is very singular, is, that this very amphitheatre was built upon the ruins of a more mighty building, and perhaps one of a more substantial structure. Tempus edax rerum tuque invidiosa vetustas omnia destruitis. In the street called St. Claude, stood a triumphal arch, which was called L'Arche admirable; it is therefore natural to conclude, that the town contained many others of less beauty. There are also within the walls large remains of the palace of Constantine. A beautiful antique statue of Venus was found here also, about an hundred and twenty years ago.— That a veritable fine woman should set all the beaux and connoisseurs of a whole town in a flame, I do not much wonder; but you will be surpris'd when I tell you that this cold trunk of marble (for the arms were never found) put the whole town of Arles together by the ears. One Sçavant said it was the goddess Diana, and wrote a book to prove it: another insisted upon it, that it was the true image of Venus; then starts up an ecclesiastic, who you know has nothing to do with women, and he pronounced, in dogmatical terms, it was neither one nor the other. At length the wise magistrates of the town agreed to send it as a present to their august monarch Louis XIV. and if you have a mind to see an inanimate woman who has made such a noise in the world, you will

will find her at Versailles, without any other notice taken of her, or the quarrels about her, than the following words written (I think) upon her pedestal, *La Venus d'Arles. This ended the dispute, as I must my letter.

* The city of ARLES is also remarkable for the council held there in the year 313, in the time of Constantine the Great, at which council Restitutus the bishop of London, as well as some other British prelates, were present.

L E T T E R XXXVII.

I Have not half done with Arles. The more I saw and heard in this town, the more I found was to be seen. The remains of the Roman theatre here would of itself be a sufficient proof that it was a town of great riches and importance. Among the refuse of this building they found several large vases of baked earth, which were open on one side, and which were fixed properly, near the seats of the audience, to receive and convey the sounds of the instruments, and voices of the actors, distinctly throughout the theatre, which had forty-eight arches; eleven behind the scenes, of ten feet wide, three grand arches of fourteen feet wide, and thirty-one of twelve feet; the diameter was thirty-one canes, and the circumference seventy-nine; and from the infinite nite number of beautiful pieces of sculpture, frizes, architraves, pillars of granite, &c. which have been dug up, it is very evident that this theatre was a most magnificent building, and perhaps would have stood firm to this day, had not a bishop of Arles, from a principle of more piety than wisdom, stript it of the finest ornaments and marble pillars, to adorn the churches. Near the theatre stood also the famous temple of Diana; and as the famous statue mentioned in my former letter, was found beneath some noble marble pillars near that spot, it is most likely La Venus d' Arles is nevertheless the goddess Diana.

I never wish more for your company than when I walk (and I walk every day) in the Elyfian fields. The spot is beautiful, the prospect, far and near, equally so. In the middle of this ancient Cimitière stands a motley building, from the middle of which however rises a cupola, which, at the first view, informs you it is the work of a Roman artist; and here you become almost bewildered in turning and twisting between such an infinite number of Pagan and Christian monuments, all lying thick upon the surface, in the utmost disorder and confusion; insomuch, that one would think the day of judgment was arrived, and the dead were risen from their graves. Neither Stepney church-yard, nor any one in or near a great city, shew so many head-stones as this spot does stone coffins of an immense size, hewn out of one piece; the covers of most of which have been broken, or removed sufficiently, to search for such things as were usually buried with the dead. Some of these monuments, and some of the handsomest too, are still however unviolated. It is very easy to distinguish the Pagan, from the Christian monuments, without opening them, as all the former have the Roman letters D M (Diis Manibus) cut upon them. It is situated, according
the

according to their custom, near the highway, the water, and the marshes. You know the ancients preferred such spots for the interment of the dead.

The tombs of Ajax and Hector, HOMER says, were near the sea, as well as other heroes of antiquity; for as they considered man to be composed of earth and water, his bones ought to be laid in one, and near the other.

I will now give you a few of the most curious inscriptions; but first I must mention a noble marble monument, moved from this spot into the Cimetière of the great hospital. This tomb is ornamented with Cornucopiæ, Pateræ, &c. and in a shield is the following inscription:

CABILIAE D. F. APPRVLLAE FLAM
 D DESIGNATAE COL. DEA. AUG. VOC. M
 O. ANNOS XIII. MENS II. DIES V.
 MARITVS VXORI PIENTISSIMAE.
 POSUIT.

This

This poor girl was not only too young to die, but too young to marry, one would think: I wish therefore her afflicted husband had told us how many years he had been married to a wife who died at the age of fourteen, two months, and five days. 'The cornucopiæ, I suppose, were to signify that this virtuous wife, I was going to say maid, was the source of all his pleasure and happiness. 'The pateræ were vases destined to receive the blood of the victims.

Supponunt alij cultos, trepidumque cruorem Suscipiunt Pateris,—Says the Poet.

On each side of the tomb are the symbols of sacrifice. It is very evident, from the fine polish of this monument, that her husband had obtained the emperor's particular leave to finish it highly.

Rogum ascia ne polito,—says the law of the twelve tables.*

* I fear I am mistaken here, and that Rogum ascia ne polito, prohibited only the polishing or smoothing the wood which composed the funeral pile.

On another tomb, which is of common stone, in the middle of a shield supported by two Cupids, is the following inscription :

	M IVNIO MESSIANO
	---VTRICI. CORP. ARELAT.
D	EIVS D. CORP. MAG. III. F.	M
	QUI VIXIT ANN. XXVIII.
	M.V.D.X. IVNIA VALERIA.
	ALVMNO CLARISSIMO.

The first word of the second line is much obliterated.

There are an infinite number of other monuments with inscriptions ; but those above, and this below, will be sufficient for me to convey to you, and you to my friend at Westminster.

	L DOMIT. DOMITIANI
	EX TRIERARCHI CLASS. GERM.
D	PECCOCEIA. VALENTINA	M
	CONIUX PIENTISSIMA.

Before I leave Arles, and I leave it reluctantly, whatever you may do, I must not omit to mention the principal monument, ment, and pride of the citizens, at this day, i. e. their obelisk. I will not tell you where, nor when it was dug up; it is sufficient to say, it was found here, that it is a single piece of granite, sixty-one feet high, and seven feet square below; yet it was easily elevated in the market-place, upon a modern pedestal, which bears four fulsome complimentary inscriptions to Louis XIV. neither of which will I copy. In elevating this monstrous single stone, the inhabitants were very adroit: they set it upright in a quarter of an hour, in the year 1676, just an hundred years ago, amidst an infinite number of joyful spectators, who are now all laid in their lowly graves; for though it weighed more than two hundred thousand weight, yet, by the help of capsterns, it was raised without any difficulty. That great king, Harry IV. had ordered the houses in the arena of the amphitheatre to be thrown down, and this obelisk to be fixed in

in the centre of it; but his death, and Louis's vanity, fixed it where it now stands. It has no beauty however to boast of but its age and size, for it bears neither polish, characters, nor hieroglyphicks; but as it seems to have been an Egyptian monument, the inhabitants of Arles have, like those people, consecrated it below to their king, and above to the sun. On the top is fixed a globe of azure, sprinkled with fleurs de lis of gold, and crowned with a radiant sun; that is to say, as the sun was made by GOD to enlighten the world, so LOUIS LE GRAND was made to govern it.

I am sure now you will excuse my mentioning what is said of this great man below: but speaking of light, I must not omit to mention, that there are men of veracity now living in this town, who affirm, that they have seen, upon opening some of the ancient monuments here, the eternal]

eternal lamps burning. The number of testimonies we have of this kind puts the matter past a doubt, that a flame has appeared at the lip of these lamps when the tombs have been first opened: one was found, you know, on the Appian way, in the tomb of Cicero's daughter, which had burnt more than seventeen centuries; another at Padua, which had burnt eight hundred years, and which was found hanging between two little phials, one of gold, the other of silver, which were both quite full of liquor, extremely clear, as well as many others; but as it is impossible to believe that flame can exist, and not consume that which feeds it, is it not more natural to conclude that those lamps, phials, &c. contained a species of phosphorus, which became luminous upon the first opening of the tombs, by the sudden rushing in of fresh air; and that the reverse of what is generally supposed is the fact; that they are not extinguished, but but illuminated by the fresh air they receive? I have seen several of these lamps here and elsewhere, most of which are of baked earth. It has been said, that there is an oil to be extracted from gold, which will not consume, and that a wick of asbestos has burnt many years in this oil, without consumption to either. I have seen a book, written by a German Jesuit, to confirm this fact; so there is authority for you, if not conviction.

As I know your keen appetite after antiquities, I will send you a few other inscriptions, and leave you to make your own comments on them.

D M

L. HOSTIL. TER.

SILVANI.

ANN. XXIII. M. II. D.

XV MATER FIL PIJSSIMI

MISERAET IN LVCIV.

AETERNALI BENIFICI

O NOVERCAE.

The following inscription is cut upon a marble column, which stands near the Jesuits' church :

SALVIS. D. D. N. N. THEODOSIO. ET VALENTINIANO.
 P.F.V. AC TRIUM. SEMPER AUG. XV.
 CONS. VIR. INL. AUXILIARIS PRÆ.
 PRÆT. GALLIA. DE ARELATE MA.
 MILLIARIA PONI. S.
 M. P. S.

In the ancient church of St. Honorè, which stands in the center of all these heathen and christian monuments, are to be seen nine bacchanalians of very ancient workmanship ; where also is the tomb of St. Honorè, employed as the altar of the church ; and beneath the church are catacombs, where the first Christians retired to prayer, during the persecution by the emperors, and where is still to be seen their altar and seven ancient sepulchres of beautiful marble and exquisite workmanship. The first is the tomb of St. Genet ; the second of St. Roland, archbishop of Arles ; the third of St. Concord, with an epitaph, epitaph, and two doves with olive branches in their beaks, cut in bas relief, and underneath are also two letters, X and P. On this tomb is the miraculous cross seen in the heavens by Constantine, who is represented before it on his knees; and on the cover of it are the heads of Constantine, Faustina, and his son; and they say the emperor saw this miracle in the heaven from the very Cimetière in which this monument now stands, in the year 315; the fifth is the tomb of St. Dorothy, virgin and martyr of Arles; the sixth St. Virgil, and the seventh St. Hilaire (both archbishops of Arles), who has borrowed, however, a pagan sepulchre; for it is adorned with the principal divinities of the ancients in bas relief.—It seems odd to see on a christian bishop's tomb Neptune, Diana, Jupiter, Venus, and the three destinies. The people here say, that this tomb represents human life; as the ancients believed that each god contributed something towards the being. Be that as it may, the tomb is a very curious one, and much admired by the connoisseurs for its excellent workmanship, as well as its antiquity; but what is more extraordinary than all is, that this catacomb, standing in the middle of the others, with its cover well and closely fixed, has always water in it, and often is quite full, and nobody can tell (but one of the priests, perhaps), from what source it comes. There is also in this church the tomb, and a long Latin epitaph, of St. Trophime, their first bishop; but the characters are all Gothic: he came hither in the year 61, and preached down that abominable practice of sacrificing three young men annually. He died in the year 61, at 72 years of age. On the front of the metropolitan church of Arles, called St. Trophime, are the two following lines in Gothic characters, cut above a thousand years:

Cernitur eximius vir Christi Discipulorum,
De Numero Trophimus, hic Septuaginta duorum.

The

The church was built in the year 625, by St. Virgil, and is a curious piece of antiquity within, and particularly without; but I will not omit to give you one of its singularities within; it is an ancient and curious inscription, in large Gothic letters, near the organ:

Terrarum Roma
Ros Missus Semper
Olim Contrito

Gemina de luce magistr A.
Aderit: velut incola Jose P.
Letheo Contulit Orch O.

To read this you will see you must take the first, the middle, and the last letter of each verse: TRO, Trophimus; GAL, Galliarum; and APO, Apostolus. The letter H, belonging to the word Joseph, must be carried to the word Orcho, and the P must stand by itself.

Trophimus Galliarum Apostolus, ut ros missus est, ex urbe Romæ rerum Dominæ Gemina de luce, scilicet a Petro et Paulo, Ecclesiæ luminaribus; Contrito orcho Letheo, nempe statim post Christi Passionem qua

Dæmonis & orchi caput contrivit, semper animas nostras nutriet, cibo illo divinæ fidei, quem nobis contulit: ut alter Joseph qui olim Ægypti populum fame pereuntem libe-ravit.

L E T T E R X X X V I I I .

MARSEILLES.

SOON after we left the town of Arles, on our way to Aix, and this city, we entered upon a most extraordinary and extensive plain: it is called the Crau, and is a principal and singular domain, belonging to, and situated on, the south side of that city; it is ten leagues in diameter; on which vast extent scarce a tree, shrub, or any verdure is visible, the whole spot being covered with flint stones of various sizes, and of singular shapes. Petrarch says, as Strabo and others have said before him, that those flint stones fell from heaven like hail, when Hercules was fighting there against the giants, who finding he was likely to be overcome, invoked his father Jupiter, who rained this hard shower of flint stones upon his enemies, which is confirmed by Æschylus.

“ Jupiter Alcidem quando respexit inermem, “ Illachrymans, Ligures faxoso perluit imbre.

But as this account may not be quite satisfactory to you, who I know love truth more than fable, I am inclined to think you will consider Possidonius's manner of accounting for it as more feasible. He says, that it was once a great lake, and having a bed of gravel at the bottom, those pebble stones, by a succession of ages, have grown to the size they now appear; but whether stones grow which lie upon the surface of the earth and out of their proper strata, I must leave you and other naturalists to determine, without repeating to you what Aristotle, and others, have said upon that subject; and therefore, instead of telling you either what they say, or think, I will tell you what I know; which is, that barren as the Crau appears to be, it not only feeds, but fattens, an infinite number of sheep and cattle, and produces such excellent wine

too

too in some parts of it, that it is called Vin de Crau, by way of pre-eminence : it has a poignant quality, is very bright, and is much esteemed for its delicious flavour. The herb which fattens the sheep, and feeds such quantities of cattle, is a little plant which grows between and under the flint stones, which the sheep and other animals turn up with their feet, to come at the bite ; beside which, there grows a plant on this Crau that bears a vermillion flower, from which the finest scarlet dye is extracted : it is a little red grain, about the size of a pea, and is gathered in the month of May ; it has been sold for a crown a pound formerly ; and a single crop has produced eleven thousand weight. This berry is the harvest of the poor, who are permitted to gather it on a certain day, but not till the lord of the manor gives notice by the sound of a horn, according to an ancient custom and privilege granted originally by king René.—On my way

way over it, I gathered only a great number of large larks by the help of my gun, though I did not forget my Montserrat vow: it was a fine day, and therefore I did not find it so tedious as it must be in winter or bad weather; for if any thing can be worse than sea, in bad weather, it must be this vast plain, which is neither land or sea, though not very distant from the latter, and in all probability was many ages since covered by the ocean.

The first town we came to after passing this vast plain is St. Chamas, which has nothing but its antiquity, and a noble and immense old castle, to recommend it, except a transparent agate statue of the Virgin in the church, as large as the life, with a tin crown upon her head. Neither the town nor the inhabitants had any thing of the appearance of French about it; every thing and every body looked so wild, and the place was in such a ruinous condition, that that I could scarce believe I was not among the Arabs in Egypt, or the ruins of Persepolis. Without the town, in a fine beautiful lawn, stands a most irregular high and rude rock, perpendicular on all sides; and under one side of it are ruins of a house, which I suppose was inhabited by the first Seigneur in the province. I looked in, and found the ruins full of miserable inhabitants, I fancy many families; but it exhibited such a scene of woe, that I was glad to get out again; and upon enquiry, I found it had been in that state ever since it had been used as an hospital during the last plague.

L E T T E R . XXXIX.

MARSEILLES.

AS the good and evil which fall within the line of a road, as well as what befall every one through life, are by comparison, I need not say what a heavenly country France (with all its untoward circumstances) appeared to us after having journeyed in Spain: what would have put me out of temper before, became now a consolation. How glad should I have been, and how perfectly content, had it been thus in Spain, was always uppermost, when things run a little cross in France.

Travellers and strangers in France, in a long journey, perhaps, have no connexion with any people, but such who have a design upon their purse. At every auberge some officious coxcomb lies in wait to ensnare them, and under one pretence or other, other, introduces himself: he will offer to shew you the town—if you accept it, you are faddled with an impertinent visitor the whole time you stay; if you refuse it, he is affronted; so let him; for no gentleman ever does that without an easy or natural introduction; and then, if they are men of a certain age, their acquaintance is agreeable and useful. An under-bred Frenchman is the most offensive civil thing in the world: a well-bred Frenchman quite the reverse.—Having dined at the table of a person of fashion at Aix, a pert priest, one of the company, asked me many questions relative to the customs and manners of the English nation; and among other things, I explained to him the elegance with which the tables of people of the first fashion were served*; and told him, that when any one changed his dish, his plate, knife, and fork, were changed also,

* This perhaps, when the advantage lay so much on the English side, I ought not to have said, and therefore he considered it as rude in me, and properly retorted it, and that they were as perfectly bright and clean as the day they came from the silversmith's shop. After a little pause, and a significant sneer—Pray, Sir, (said he) and do you not change your napkins also? I was piqued a little, and told him we did not, but that indeed I had made a little mistake, which I would rectify; which was, that though I had told him the plate, knife, and fork, were so frequently changed at genteel tables in England, there was one exception to it; for it sometimes happened that low under-bred priests (especially on a Sunday) were necessarily admitted to the tables of people of fashion, and that the butler sometimes left them to wipe their knife upon their bread, as I had often seen Louis XV. do, even after eating fish with it.—As it was on a Sunday I had met with this fop of divinity, at a genteel table, I thought I had been even with him, and I believe he thought so too, for he asked me no more more questions; yet he assured me at his going out, “ he had the honour to be my most obedient humble servant.” This overstrained civility, so unlike good breeding, puts me in mind of what was said of poor Sir W^M. ST. Q—N, after his death, by an arch wag at Bath: Sir William, you know, was a polite old gentleman, but had the manners and breeding rather of the late, than the present age; and though a man deservedly esteemed for his many virtues, was by some thought too ceremonious. Somebody at the round table at Morgan’s coffee-house happened to say, Alas! poor Sir William! he is gone; but he was a good man, and is surely gone to heaven!” Yes,” replied the wag, “ he is gone to heaven, and I can tell you what he said when he first entered the holy place.—The interrogation followed of course: “ Why,” said he, “ seeing a large concourse of departed souls, and not a soul that he knew, he bowed to the right and left, said he

and

he begged pardon—he feared he was troublesome, and if so, he would instantly retire.”—So the Frenchman, when he says he would cut himself in four pieces to serve you, only means to be very civil; and he will be so, if it does not put him to any expence.

Aix is a well built city; the principal street and public walk called the Course, is very long, very broad, and shaded by stately trees. In the middle of it are four or five fine fountains constantly running, one of which is of very hot water, at which man and beast are constantly drinking. The city abounds with a great deal of good company, drawn to it from all parts of Europe by the efficacy of the waters, and to examine its antiquities; for it has, in and about it, many Greek as well as Roman monuments.

Some part of the country between Aix and this populous city is very beautiful, but

but near the town scarce any vegetation is seen; on all sides high hills and broken rocks present themselves; and one wonders how a city so large and so astonishingly populous is supported. When I first approached the entrance gate, it opened a perspective view of the Course, a street of great extent, where the heads of the people were so thick together, that I concluded it was a FAIR day, and that the whole country were collected together; but I found it was every day the same. I saw a prodigious quantity of game and provisions of all kinds, not only in the shops, but in the streets, and concluded it was not only a cheap, but plentiful country; but I soon found my mistake: it was the evening before Lent commenced, and I could find no provisions of any kind very easily afterwards, and every thing very dear. You may imagine the price of provisions at Marseilles, when I tell you that they have their poultry from Lyons; it is however a noble city, crowded with men of all nations, walking in the streets in the proper habits of their country. The harbour, or rather bafon, is the most fecure sea-port in Europe, being land-locked on all fides, except at a very narrow entrance; and as there is very little rife or fall of water, the veffels are always afloat. Many of the galley flaves have little fhops near the spot where the galleys are moored, with their fterns almost clofe to a noble quay, and appear happy and decently drefsed; fome of them are rich, and make annual remittances to their friends. In the Hôtel de Ville are two fine large pictures, which were taken lately from the Jefuits' college: one represents the dreadful fcenes which were feen in the Grand Courfe during the great plague at Marseilles; the other, the fame fad fcene on the quay, before the doors of the houfe in which it now hangs. A perfon cannot look upon thefe pictures one minute before he

he becomes enthralled in the woes which every way present themselves. You see the good bishop confessing the sick, the carts carrying out the dead, children sucking at the breasts of their dead mothers, wives and husbands bewailing, dead bodies lowering out of higher windows by cords, the slaves plundering, the priests exhorting; and such a variety of interesting and afflicting scenes so forcibly struck out by the painter, that you seem to hear the groans, weepings, and bewailings, from the dying, the sick, and the found; and the eye and mind have no other repose on these pictures but by fixing it on a dead body. The painter, who was upon the spot, has introduced his own figure, but armed like a serjeant with a halberd. The pictures are indeed dreadfully fine; one is much larger than the other; and it is said the town magistrates cut it to fit the place it is in; but it is impossible to believe any body of men could be guilty of such an act of barbarism! There is still standing in this town, the house of a Roman senator, now inhabited by a shoe-maker. In the cathedral they have a marble stone, on which is engraven in Arabic characters; a monumental inscription to the following effect:

“ God is alone permanent.

“ This is the sepulchre of his servant and martyr,
 “ who having placed his confidence in the Most “ High, he trusts that his sins will be forgiven.”

JOSEPH, son of ABDALLAH, of the town of Metelin, died in the moon Zilbuge.

I bought here an Egyptian household god, or lare of solid metal, which was lately dug up near the city walls; it is about nine inches high, and weighs about five pounds. Several of the hieroglyphic characters are visible on the breast and back, and its form is that of an embalmed mummy. By a wholesome law of this city, the richest citizens must be buried like the poorest, in a coffin of nine livres

livres value, and that coffin must be bought at the general hospital. The sale of these coffins for the dead, goes a great way towards the support of the poor and the sick.

At this town I experienced the very reverse in every respect of what I met with at Barcelona, though I had no better recommendation to Mr. BIRBECK, his Britannick Majesty's agent here, than I had to the Consul of Barcelona. He took my word at first sight; nay, he took my notes, and gave me money for them, and shewed me and my family many marks of friendly attention. Such a man, at such a distance from one's own country, is a cordial to a troubled breast, and an acquisition to every Englishman who goes there, either for health or curiosity. Mr. Birbeck took me with him to a Grande Concert, to which he is an annual subscriber, and which was performed in a room in every respect suitable to so large a band, and so brilliant an assembly: He and his good wife were the only two British faces I had seen for many months, who looked like Britons. I shall, indeed I must, soon leave this town, and shall take Avignon on my way to Lyons, from whence you shall soon hear from me again.

P. S. I had forgot to mention, when I was speaking of Montpellier, that the first gentry are strongly impressed with the notion of the superiority of the English in every part of philosophy, more especially in the science of physic; and I found at Montpellier, that these sentiments, so favourable to our countrymen, had been much increased by the extraordinary knowledge and abilities of Dr. MILMAN, an English physician, who resided there during the winter 1775. This gentleman, who is one of Dr. RADCLIFFE's travelling physicians, had performed several very astonishing cures, in cases which the French

French physicians had long treated without success: and indeed the French physicians, however checked by interest or envy, were obliged to acknowledge this gentleman's uncommon sagacity in the treatment of diseases. What I say of this ingenious traveller, is for your sake more than his; for I know nothing more of him than the fame he has left behind him at Montpellier, and which I doubt not will soon be verified by his deeds among his own countrymen.

L E T T E R X X X V I .

AVIGNON.

THERE is no dependence on what travellers say of different towns and places they have visited, and therefore you must not lay too much stress upon what I say. A lady of fashion, who had travelled all over France, gave the preference to the town I last wrote to you from (Marseilles); to me, the climate excepted, it is of all others the most disagreeable; yet that lady did not mean to deceive; but people often prefer the town for the sake of the company they find, or some particular or local circumstance which attended their residence in it. In that respect, I too left it reluctantly, having met with much civility, and some old friends there; but surely, exclusive of its fine harbour, and favourable situation for trade, trade, it has little else to recommend it, but riot, mob, and confusion. Provisions are very dear, and not very good.

On our road here we came again through Aix. Le Mule Blanche without the town, is better than any auberge within, and Mons. L'Abbé Abrard Preteur, de la ordre de St. Malta, is not only a very agreeable, but a very convenient acquaintance for a stranger, and who is always ready to shew the English, in particular, attention, and who had much attention shewn him by Lord A. PERCY and his lady.

From Aix we passed through Lambresque, Orgon, and Sencage, a fine country, full of almond trees, and which were in full blossom on the 7th of March. At Orgon the post-house was so bad, that after my horse was in the stable, I was obliged to put him to, and remove to the Soleil d'Or, without the town, and made a good move too.

The

The situation of Notre Dame de St. Pierre, a convent on a high hill, is worthy of notice, and the antiquity of the town also.—Five leagues from Orgon we crossed a very awkward passage in a ferry-boat, and were landed in the Pope's territories, about five miles from Avignon. The castle and higher part of the town were visible, rising up in the middle of a vast plain, fertile and beautiful as possible. If we were charmed with the distant view, we were much more so upon a nearer approach. Nothing can be more pleasing than the well-planted, and consequently well-shaded, coach and foot roads round this pretty little city; all shut in with the most beautiful ancient fortification walls I ever beheld, which are in perfect repair; nor were we asked any questions by the pope's soldiers, or custom-house officers. I had a letter to Dr. POWER, an English physician in this town, who received me with great civility, and made me known to Lord

MOUNT

MOUNTGARRET, and Mr. BUTLER, his son, with whom I had the honour to spend some very agreeable hours: his lordship has an excellent house here, and keeps a table, truly characteristic of the hospitality of his own country.—And now I cannot help telling you of a singular disorder which attacked me the very day I arrived; and the still more singular manner I got well. The day before I arrived, we had been almost blown along the road to Orgon by a most violent wind; but I did not perceive that I had received any cold or injury from it, till we arrived here, and then I had such an external foreness from head to foot, that I almost dreaded to walk or stir, and when I did, it was as slow as my feet could move. After continuing so for some days, I was much urged to dine with Lord MOUNTGARRET, on St. Patrick's day; I did so, and by drinking a little more than ordinary, set nature to work, who, without any

any other doctor, did the business, by two or three nights copious sweats. I would not have mentioned this circumstance, but it may be the mal du país, and ought to be mentioned for the method of cure.

There was not quite so good an understanding between the pope's legate and the English residing here, as could be wished: some untoward circumstance had happened, and there seemed to be faults on both sides: it was carried, I think, to such a length, that when the English met him, they did not pull off their hats; but as it happened before I came, and as in our walks and rides we often met him airing in his coach, we paid that respect which is every where due to a first magistrate, and he took great pains to return it most graciously. His livery, guards, &c. make a very splendid appearance: he holds a court, and has levees every Sunday, though not liked by the French. At the church church of St. Didier, in a little chapel of mean workmanship, is the tomb of the celebrated Laura, whose name Petrarch has rendered immortal. The general opinion is, that she died a virgin: but it appears by her tomb, that she was the wife of Hugurs de Sade, and that she had many children. About two hundred years after her death, some curious people got permission to open her tomb, in which they found a little box, containing some verses written by Petrarch, and a medalion of lead; on one side of which was a lady's head, and on the reverse, the four following letters, M. L. M. E.

Francis I. passing through Avignon, visited this tomb, and left upon it the following epitaph, of his own composition:

- “ En petit lieu compris vous pouvez voir “ Ce qui comprend beaucoup par renommée ;
 “ Plume, labeur, la langue & le devoir
 “ Turent vaincus par l’aimant d’aimée :
 “ O gentille ame, etant tant estimée !
 “ Qui le pourra louer qu’en se laissant ?
 “ Car la parole est toujours reprimée,
 “ Quand le sujet surmonte le disant.”

This town is crowded with convents and churches. The convent of the Celestines, founded by Charles VI. is richly endowed, and has noble gardens: there are not above fourteen or fifteen members, and their revenue is near two thousand pounds sterling a year. In their church is a very superb monument of pope Clement VII. who died here in the year 1394, as a long Latin inscription upon it announces. They shew in this house a picture painted by king RENE’; it represents the frightful remains of his beloved mistress, whose body he took out of the grave, and painted it in the state he then found it,

it, i. e. with the worms crawling about it: it is a hideous figure, and hideously painted; the stone coffin stands on a line with the figure, but is above a foot too short for the body; and on the other side is a long scroll of verses, written in Gothic characters, which begin thus:

“ Une fois fus sur toutes femmes belle “ Mais par la mort suis devenue telle
 “ Ma chair estoit tres-belle, fraische & tendre;
 “ Or est elle toute tournée en cendre.”

There follow at least forty other such lines.

There is also in this convent, a fine monument, on which stands the effigies of St. Benezet, a shepherd of Avignon, who built (they say) the bridge from the town over the Rhone, in consequence of a dream, in the year 1127. Some of the noble arches are still standing, and part of a very pretty chapel on it, nearly in the middle of the river; but a great part of the bridge has been

been carried away, many years since, by the violence of the river, which often not only overflows its banks, but the lower part of the town. In 1755, it rose seventeen feet higher than its usual flowing, and I saw marks in many of the streets, high above my head, against the sides of houses, which it had risen to; but with all my industry, I could find no mark upon the house where Lady Mary Wortley Montague dwelt, though she resided some time here, and though I endeavoured to find it.

I need not describe the celebrated fountain of Vaucluse, near this town, where Petrarch composed his works, and established Mount Parnassus. This is the only part of France in which there is an Inquisition, but the officers seem content with their profits and honours, without the power.

One part of the town is allotted to the Jews, where about six or seven hundred live

live peaceably and have their synagogue ; and it was here the famous rabbin Joseph Meir was born ; he died in the year 1554. He was author, you know, of Annales des Rois de France, et de la Maison Ottomane.

Not far from Avignon, on the banks of the same rapid river, stands Beaucaire, famous for its annual FAIR, where merchandise is brought from all parts of Europe, free of all duties : it begins on the 22d of July ; and it is computed that eight millions of livres are annually expended there in eight days. Avignon is remarkable for the number Seven ; having seven ports, seven parishes, seven colleges, seven hospitals, and seven monasteries ; and I may add, I think, seven hundred bells, which are always making a horrid jingle ; for they have no idea of ringing bells harmoniously in any part of France.

At SALON, near AVIGNON, stands a fine monument of Michael Nostradamus, a shoe-maker; his effigies is in the town wall, with his arms and epitaph. This last is written in Latin. He died in 1566; and, if his epitaph writer tells truth, he was, indeed, an extraordinary man; for it says, “ This tomb contains the body of the re“ nowned M. Nostradamus, whose divine “ pen was admired by all the world, and “ that Anne Pence, his widow, was as “ good as he was great; his son also ap“ pears to have been a philosopher, an “ astrologer, a prophet, and a physician.

 “ Anne, the wife, and mother of these “ two great men, desires that nobody will “ envy their repose, or reflect on their me“ mory;” by which caution, it should seem as if she was aware that people would hint what she seemed to know, and what I would say, but for the respect I bear to the request of a lady of such fashion.

L E T T E R XLI.

LYONS.

AFTER a month's residence at Avignon, where I waited till the weather and roads amongst the high Dauphiné mountains were improved, I set out for this city. I had, you know, when outward-bound, dropt down to Pont St. Esprit by water, so it was a new scene to us by land, and I assure you it was a fine one—the vast and extensive rich vales, adorned on all sides with such romantic mountains, could not be otherwise, in such a climate. Our first stage was only four long leagues to Orange. This is the last town in the pope's territories; and within a quarter of a mile of it stands, in a corn field, a beautiful Roman triumphal arch, so great in ruins, that it would be an ornament even in Rome. The Palais Royal, at this town, has nothing to recommend it, but that it affords a prospect of this rich morsel of antiquity.

From Orange we passed through Pierlaite, Donzeir, and several smaller towns, and lay one night at a single house, but an excellent auberge, called Soucé, kept by an understanding sensible host.

At a little village, called Atang, on the banks of the Rhone, we stopped a day or two, to enjoy the sweet situation. Just opposite to it, on the other side of the river, stands a large town (Tournau), which added to the beauty of our village, over which hangs a very high mountain, from whence the best Hermitage wine is collected. I suppose it is called Hermitage, from a hermit's cell on the top of it; but so unlike the Monferrat hermitages, that I contented myself with only tasting the hermit's wine. It was so good, indeed, that though I did not see how it was possible

sible to get it safe to the north side of France, I could not withstand the temptation of buying a cask, for which I was to pay twelve guineas, and did pay one as earnest, to a very sensible, and, I believe, honest and opulent wine merchant, who, however, made me a present of two bottles when I came away, almost worth my guinea. It is three livres a bottle on the spot; and he shewed me orders he had received from men of fashion in England for wine; among which was one from Mr. Ryder, Sir Dudley Ryder's son, I fancy, who, I found, was well satisfied with his former dealings. Do you know that claret is greatly improved by a mixture of hermitage, and that the best claret we have in England is generally so adulterated?

The next towns we passed were Pevige and Vienne, the latter only five leagues from this city. It is a very ancient town, and was formerly a Roman colony. The cathedral is a large and noble Gothic structure, and in it is a fine tomb of cardinal De Mountmoin, said to be equal in workmanship to Richlieu's, in the Sorbonne, but said to be so by people no ways qualified to judge properly. It is, indeed, an expensive, but a miserable performance, when put in competition with the works of Girardeau. About half a mile without the town is a noble pyramidal Roman monument, said to have stood in the centre of the market-place in the time of the Romans. There is also to be seen in this town, a Mosaic pavement, discovered only a few years since, wonderfully beautiful indeed, and near ten feet square, though not quite perfect, being broken in the night by some malicious people, out of mere wantonness, soon after it was discovered.

At this town I was recommended to the table ronde; but as there are two, la grande grande and la petite, I must recommend you to the petite, to which I was obliged to move; for of all the dreadful women I ever came near, Madam Rouffillon has the least mellifluous notes; her ill behaviour, however, procured me the honour of a very agreeable acquaintance, the Marquis de Valan, who made me ashamed, by shewing us an attention we had no right to expect; but this is one, among many other agreeable circumstances, which attend strangers travelling in France. French gentlemen never see strangers ill treated, without standing forth in their defence; and I hope English gentlemen, whom Horace calls Britannos hospitibus feros, will follow their example, because it is a piece of justice due to strangers, in whatever country they are, or whatever country they are from; it is doing as one would be done by. That prejudice which prevails in England, even among some people of fashion, against the French nation, is illiberal in the highest degree; nay, it is more—it is a national disgrace.—When I recollect with what ease and uninterrupted I have passed through so many great and little towns, and extensive provinces, without a symptom of wanton rudeness being offered me, I blush to think how a Frenchman, if he made no better figure than I did, would have been treated in a tour through Britain.—My monkey, with a pair of French jack boots, and his hair en queue, rode postilion upon my sturdy horse some hours every day. Such a sight, you may be sure, brought forth old and young, sick and lame, to look at him and his master. Jocko put whole towns in motion, but never brought any affront on his master—they came to look and to laugh, but not to deride or insult. The post-boys, it is true, did not like to see their fraternity taken off, in my little

little theatre; but they seldom discovered it, but by a grave salutation; and sometimes a good-humoured fellow called him comrade, and made Jocko a bow. They could not laugh at his bad feat, for not one of them rode with more ease, or had a handfomer laced jacket. Mr. Buffon says, the monkey and magot (and mine is the latter, for he has no tail) make their grimace, or chattering, equally to show their anger, or to make known their appetite. With all due deference to this great naturalist, I must beg leave to say, that this observation is not quite just: there is as much difference between the grimace of my Jocko, when he is angry or hungry, and when he grins to shew delight, as there is in man, when he gnashes his teeth in wrath, or laughs from mirth.

Between Avignon and this town I met a dancing bear, mounted by a Magot. As it was upon the high road, I desired leave to present Jocko to his grandfather, for so he appeared both in age and size; the interview, though they were both males, was very affecting. Never did a father receive a long-lost child with more seeming affection than the old gentleman did my Jocko; he embraced him with every degree of tenderness imaginable, while the young gentleman (like other young gentlemen of the present age) betrayed a perfect indifference. In my conscience I believe there was some consanguinity between them, or the reception would have proved more mutual. Between you and me, I fear, were I to return to England, I might find myself a sad party in such an interview. It is a sad reflection; but perhaps Providence may wisely ordain such things, in order as men grow older, to wean them from the objects of their worldly affections, that they may resign more readily to the decrees

it

decree of fate. That good man, Dr. ARBUTHNOT, did not seem to dread the approach of death on his own account, so much as from the grievous affliction HE had reason to fear it would bring upon his children and family.

L E T T E R XLII.

LYONS.

I Have now spent a month in my second visit to this great and flourishing city, and fortunately took lodgings in a Hotel, where I found the lady and sister of Monf. Le Marquis De Valan, whose politeness to us I mentioned in a former letter at Vienne, and by whose favour I have had an opportunity of seeing more, and being better informed, than I could have been without so respectable an acquaintance. At Vienne I only knew his rank: here I became acquainted with his good character and fortune, which is very considerable in Dauphiné, where he has two or three fine seats. His lady came to Lyons, to lie-in, attended by the marquis's sister, a Chanoinesse, a most agreeable sensible woman, of a certain age; but the countess is young and beautiful.

You

You may imagine that, after what I said of Lyons, on my way to Spain, I did not associate much with my own country-folks on my return. Indeed, my principal amusement was to see as much as I could, in a town where so much is to be seen; and in relating to you what I have seen, I will begin with the Hotel de Ville: if it had not that name, I should have called it a palace, for there are few palaces so large or so noble; upon the first entrance of which, in the vestibule, you see, fixed in the wall, a large plate of bronze, bearing stronger marks of fire than of age; on which were engraven, seventeen hundred years ago, two harangues made by the emperor Claudius in the senate, in favour of the Lyonois, and which are not only legible at this day, but all the letters are sharp and well executed: the plate, indeed, is broke quite through the middle, but fortunately the fraction runs between the first and second harangues, so as to have done but little injury among the letters. As I do not know whether you ever saw a copy of it, I enclose it to you, and desire you will send it as an agreeable exercise, to be well translated by my friend at Oxford.

On the other side of the vestibule is a noble stair-case, on which is well painted the destruction of the city, by so dreadful a fire in the time of the Romans, that Seneca, who gives an account of it in a letter to his friend, says,

“ Una nox fuit inter urbem maximam et “ nullam.”

i. e. One night only intervened between a very great city and nothing.

There is something awful in this scene ; to see on one side of the stair-case the conflagration well executed ; on the other, strong marks of the very fire which burnt so

so many ages ago; for there can be no doubt but that the bronze plate stood at that time in the Roman Hotel de Ville, and was burnt down with it, because it was dug up among the refuse of the old city, on the mountain called Fourviere, on the other side of the river, where the original city was built.—In cutting the letters on this large plate of bronze, they have, to gain room, left no distance between the words, but shewn the division only by a little touch thus < with the engraver; and where a word ended with a C, or G, they have clapped the touch within the concavity of the letter, otherwise it is admirably well executed.

Upon entering into the long gallery above stairs, you are shewn the late king and queen's pictures at full length, surrounded with the heads of some hundred citizens; and in one corner of the room an ancient altar, the Taurobolium, dug up

up in 1704, near the same place where Claudius's harangue was found. It is of common stone, well executed, about four feet high, and one foot and a half square: on the front of it is the bull's head, in demi relief, adorned with a garland of corn; on the right side is the sacrificial knife* of a very singular form; and on the left the head of a ram, adorned as the bull's; near the point of the knife are the following words, cujus factum est; the top of the altar is hollowed out into the form of a shallow basin, in which, I suppose, incense was burnt, and part of the victims.

The Latin inscription under the bull's head is very well cut, and very legible; by which it appears, that by the express order of CYBELE, the reputed mother of

* The knife which is cut in demi relief on the Tauro-lolium, is crooked upon the back, exactly in the same manner and form as may be seen on some of the medals of the kings of Macedonia.

the gods, for the honour and health of the emperor Antoninus Pius, father of his country, and for the preservation of his children, *Lucius Æmilius Carpus received the horns of the bull, by the ministrations of Quintus Sammius Secundus, transported them to the Vatican, and consecrated, at his own expence, this altar and the head of the bull †; but I will send the inscription

* Lucius Æmilius Carpus was a priest, and a man of great riches: he was of the quality of Sevir, and probably one of the six priests of the temple of Augustus—Sextumvir Augustalis.

† Several inscriptions of this kind have been found both in Italy and Spain, but by far the greater number among the Gauls; and as the sacrifices to the goddess Cybele were some of the most ancient of the Pagan rites, so they were the last which were suppressed on the change of Paganism into Christianity; since we find one of the Taurobolian inscriptions with so low a date as the time of the emperor Valentinian the Third. The silence of the heathen writers on this head is very wonderful; for the only one who makes any mention of them is Julius Firmicus Maternus, in his Dissertation on the Errors of the Pagan Religion; as Dillenius, in his elaborate account of the Taurobolium, has remarked.

The ceremony of the consecration of the high priest of Cybele, has been mistaken by many learned men for the scription, and a model* of the altar, as soon as I can have it made, as I find here a very ingenious sculptor and modeller; who, to my consecration of the Roman Pontifex Maximus; which dignity, from the very earliest infancy of the Roman empire, was always annexed to that of the emperor himself.

* The model is now in the possession of the ingenious Dr. HARRINGTON, at Bath.

The priests who had the direction of the Taurobolia, wore the same vestments, without washing out the bloody stains, as long as they would hold together.

By these rights and baptisms by blood they thought themselves, as it were, re-born to a life eternal. Sextilius Agedius says, that he was born a-new, to life eternal, by means of the expiation of the Taurobolium and Criobolium.

Nor were the priests alone initiated in this manner, but also others, who were not of that order. In particular cases the regenerations were only promised for twenty years.

Besides the Taurobolia and Criobolia, which were instituted at the expence of whole cities and provinces, there were others also, which were founded by the bounty of private people. We often meet with the names of magistrates and priests of other gods, who were admitted into these mysteries, and who instituted Taurobolia as offerings for the safety of the emperor, or their own. The rites of the Taurobolia lasted sometimes many days.

The

TABROBOLIO MATRIS DEUM MAGNE IDE.E QUO FACTUM EST EX IMPERIO
MATRIS IDE.E DEUM
PRO SALUTE IMPERATORIS CESARIS
TITILELII

ADRIANI ANTONINI AUGUSTI PII PATRIS PATRIE
LIBERORUMQUE EJUS
ET STATUS COLONIE LUGDUNENSIS
LUCIUS EMILIUS CARPUS SEXTUMVIR
AUGUSTALIS IEMDENOROPHORUS

VIREN EXCEPT ET A VATICANO
TRANS TULIT ARAM ET BUCRANIAM
SVO IMPENDIO CONSECRAVIT
SACERDOTE
QUINTO SAMMIO SECUNDO AB QUINDECIMVIRIS
OCCUBO ET CORONA EXORNATO
CUI SANCTISSIMUS QVEDO LUGDUNENSIS
PERFE TUITATEM SACERDOTIS DECREVIT
APPTO ANNIA ATILIO BRADUA TITO
CIZO VIBO VARO CONSULEBUS
LOCUS DATUS DECRETO DECURIONUM.

my great surprife, fays no one has hitherto been taken from it. And here let me obferve, left I forget it, to fay, that Augustus lived three years in this city.

The

The infcription on the Taurobolium, which is on the fame fide with the head of the bull, we have endeavoured to explain by filling up the abbreviations which are met with in the Roman character.

TAUROBOLIO MATRIS DEUM MAGNÆ IDÆÆ
 QUOD FACTUM EST EX IMPERIO
 MATRIS IDÆÆ DEUM
 PRO SALUTÆ IMPERATORIS CÆSARIS
 TITI ÆLII
 ADRIANI ANTONINI AUGUSTI PII PATRIS PATRIÆ
 LIBERORUMQUE EJUS
 ET STATUS COLONIÆ LUGDUNENSIS
 LUCIUS ÆMILIUS CARPUS SEXTUMVIR
 AUGUSTALIS ITEM DENDROPHORUS
 VIRES EXCEPT ET A VATICANO
 TRANSTULIT ARAM ET BUCRANIUM
 SUO IMPENDIO CONSECRAVIT
 SACERDOTÉ
 QUINTO SANNIO SECUNDO AB QUINDECENVIRIS
 OCCABO ET CORONA EXORNATO
 CUI SANCTISSIMUS ORDO LUGDUNENSIS
 PERPETUITATEM SACERDOTIS DECREVIT
 APPIO ANNIA ATILIO BRADUA TITO
 CLODIO VIBIO VARO CONSULIBUS
 LOCUS DATUS DECRETO DECURIONUM.

The Taurobolium was one of the great mysteries, you know, of the Roman religion, in the observance of which, I think, they dug a large hole in the earth, and covered it with planks, laid at certain distances, so as to give light into the subterranean temple. The person who has to receive the Taurobolia then descended into the theatre, and received on his head, and whole body, the smoking hot blood of the bull, which is there sacrificed for that purpose. If a single bull was only sacrificed, I think they called it simply a Taurobolium; if a ram was added to it, as was sometimes done, it was then called a Taurobolium, and Criobolium. Sometimes too, I believe a goat was also slain.

After all the blood of the victim animals was discharged, the priests and cybils retired beneath the theatre, and he who had received the bloody sacrifice came forth and exposed himself, besmeared with blood,

blood, to the people, who all prostrated themselves before him, with reverential awe, as one who was thereby particularly sanctified, and whose person ought to be regarded with the highest veneration, and looked upon with holy horror; nor did this sanctification, I think, end with the ceremony, but rendered the person of the sanctified holy for twenty years. An inscription cited by Gruter, seems to confirm this matter, who, after speaking of one Nepius Egnatius Faventinus, who lived in the year of Christ 176, says,

“ Percepto Taurobolio Criobolioque feliciter,”

Concludes with these words;

“ Vota Faventinus bis deni suscipit orbis

“ Ut maclet repetens aurata fronte bicornes.”

The bis denus orbis, seems to imply the space of twice ten years.

And here I cannot help making a little comparifon between the honours paid by the Roman citizens to their emperors, and thofe of the prefent times to the princes of the blood royal. You muft know that the prefent king's brother came to Lyons in the year 1775, and thus it is recorded in letters of gold upon their quay:

LOUIS XVI. REGNANT.
EN MEMORIE DE L'HEVREUX JOUR CINQ.
SEPTEMBRE MDCCLXXV.
OU
MONSIEUR FRERE DU ROI ET MADAME
SONT ARRIVES EN CETTE VILLE
CE QUAI
DE L'AGREEMENT DU PRINCE
ET PAR ORDONNANCE DU CONSULAT
DU DOUZE DU MEME MOIS
A ETE NOMME A PERPETUITE
QUAI MONSIEUR.

If the bourgeois of Lyons, however, are not men of genius, they are ingenious men, and they have a moft delightful country to dwell dwell in. I think I may say, that from the high hills which hang about this city, and taking in the rivers, fertile vales, rude rocks, vineyards, and coutry seats, far and near, Lyons and its environs afford a greater variety of natural and artificial beauties, than any spot in Europe. It is, however, by no means a place for the winter residence of a stranger. Most of the natives advanced in years were carried off last winter. The furly winds, which come down the Rhone with impetuous blasts, are very disagreeable and dangerous. I found the cold intolerable out of the sunshine, and the heat intolerable in it, even in the month of May. In England I never wore but one under-waistcoat; in Spain, and in the south of France, I found two necessary. The Spaniards wear long cloaks, and we laugh at them; but the laugh would come more properly from them. There is in those climates a vifnejs in the air that penetrates through and through; and I am sure that such who travel to the southward for the recovery of their health, ought to be ten times more upon their guard, to be better secured against the keen blasts of the south of France, than even against an easterly wind in England.

The disorder which carried off so many last winter at Lyons, was called la Gripe. In a large hotel only one person escaped it, an English lady. They called it la Gripe, from the fast hold it took of the person it seized; nor did it let them go till April.

On my way hither, I found it sometimes extremely hot: it is now the first of May, and I am shaking by the side of a good fire, and have had one constantly every day for this fortnight.

LETTER

L E T T E R XLIII.

LYONS.

THE Lyonnois think their town was particularly honoured by the Taurobolium; but it was a common practice to offer that sacrifice not only for the emperor's health, but for the preservation of a city. There are two of these altars in the town of Latoure; one consecrated for the preservation of the emperor Gordian, on which is the following inscription:

PRO SALVTE IMP. ANTONINI GORDIANO PII FEL.
AVG. TOTIVSQVE DOMVS DIVINÆ PROQVE STATV CIVIT.
LACTOR TOROPOLIVM FECIT ORDO LACTOR D. N. GORDIANO
II ET POMPEIANO COS VI ID DEC CVRANTIB M
EROTIO ET FESTO CANINIS SACERD.

And in a little village near Marseilles, called Pennes, there is a stone, on which is engraven, MATRI DEVM MAGNÆ IDEÆ.

And on another, in the same town,

MATRI DEVM TAVROPOLIVM.

I must

I must not omit to give you a copy of a singular inscription on the tomb of a mint-master, which was found in Lyons, and is preserved entire :

NOBILIS TIB. CÆSARIVS AVG. SERÆQ. MONET HIC
AD QVI ESCIT JVLIA ADEPTA CONJVNKET
PERPETVA FILIA D. S. D.

The most ancient money which has been found in and about this city is the little coin of Mark Anthony ; on one side of which is represented the triumvirate ; on the other, a lion, with the word Lugduni under it ; on each side of the lion are the letters A and X L. The antiquarians here think those letters marked the value of the piece, and that it was about forty sous ; but is it not more probable that this was only the mint-master's mark ?

Nothing can be a stronger proof of the importance of this city, in the time of the Romans, than the immense expence they were

were at in erecting such a number of grand aqueducts, one of which was eighteen leagues in length: many parts of them are still visible: and it appears that they spent for the reparation of them, at one time, near one thousand talents; and here it was that the four grand Roman highways divided; one of which went directly to the sea, and another to the Pyrenees.

Agrippa, who was the constructor of most of these noble monuments of Roman grandeur, would not permit the Lyonnois to erect any monument among them to his memory; and yet his memory is, in a very particular manner, preserved to this day in the very heart of the city; for in the front of a house on the quay de Villeroy, is a medallion of baked earth, which, I think, perfectly resembles him. Sure I am it is an unquestionable antique: it is a little disfigured indeed, and disgraced
by

by his name being written upon it in modern characters. But there is another monument of Agrippa here: it is part of the epitaph of an officer, or soldier, of the third cohort, whose duty it was to take an account of the expence of each day for the subsistence of the troops employed to work on the highways; and this officer was called A. Rationibus Agrippæ.

There are an infinite number of Roman inscriptions preserved at Lyons, among which is the following singular one:

DIIS INIQVIS QVI ANIMVLAM TVAM RAPVERVNT.

I have already told you of a modern monument erected by the Lyonnois; and now, with grief and concern, I must tell you of an ancient one which they have demolished! It was a most beautiful structure, called the tomb of the Two Lovers: that,

that, however, was a mistake; it was the tomb of a brother and sister named Amandus, or Amans; for near where it stood was lately found the following monumental inscription:

D M

ET MEMORIÆ ÆTERNÆ OLIÆ TRIBVTÆ
FEMINÆ SANCTISSIMÆ ARVESCIVS
AMANDVS FRATER SORORI KARISSIMÆ SIBIQVE AMANTISSIMÆ P. C. ET SVB ASCIA DEDICAVIT.

I have seen a beautiful drawing of this fine monument, which stood near the high road, a little without the town. The barbarian bourgeois threw it down about seventy years ago, to search for treasure.

But enough of antiquities; and therefore I will tell you truly my sentiments with respect to the south of France; which is, that Lyons is quite southward enough for an Englishman, who will, if he goes farther, ther,

ther, have many wants which cannot be supplied. After quitting Lyons, he will find neither good butter, milk, nor cream. At Lyons, every thing which man can wish for is in perfection; it is indeed a rich, noble, and plentiful town, abounding with every thing that is good, and more finery than even in Paris itself. They have a good theatre, and some tolerable actors; among whom is the handsomest Frenchman I ever beheld, and, a little stiffness excepted, a good actor. Their dancers, male and female, are excellent indeed.

Any young gentleman traveller, particularly of the English nation, who is desirous of replenishing his purse, cannot, even in Paris, find more convenient occasions to throw himself in fortune's way, than at the city of Lyons.

An English lady, and two or three gentlemen, have lately been so fortunate there, as to find lodgings at a great hotel, gratis; and I desire you will particularly recommend a long stay at Lyons to my Oxonian friend; where he may see the world, without looking out at the window.

L E T T E R XLIV.

I FIND I omitted to give you before I left Nismes, some account of Monsieur Segulier's cabinet, a gentleman whose name I have before mentioned, and whose conversation and company were so very agreeable to me. Among an infinite number of natural and artificial curiosities, are many ancient Roman inscriptions, one of which is that of T. Julius Festus, which Spon mentions in his Melanges D'Antiquité. There are also a great number of Roman utensils of bronze, glass, and earthen-ware. The Romans were well acquainted with the dangerous consequences of using copper vessels * in their kitchens, as may be seen in this collection, where there are a great many for that purpose; but all strongly gilt, not only within, but without,

* See the treatises on this subject by Dr. FALCONER of Bath.

out, to prevent a possibility of verdegrise arising. There is also a bronze head of a colossal statue, found not many years since near the fountain of Nismes, which merits particular attention, as well as a great number of Roman and Greek medals and medallions, well preserved, and some of which are very rare. The natural curiosities are chiefly composed of fossils and petrifications; among the latter are an infinite number of petrified fish enclosed in solid stones; and in which one sees the finest membranes of the fins, and every part of the fish delineated by the pencil of nature, in the most exquisite manner; the greater part of these petrifications were collected by the hands of the possessor, some from Mount Bola, others from Mount Liban, Switzerland, &c.

Mr. Seguier's Herbarry consists of more than ten thousand plants; but above all, Mr. Seguier himself is the first, and most valuable part of his cabinet, having spent a long life in rational amusements; and, though turned of fourscore, he has all the cheerfulness of youth, without any of the garrulity of old age. When he honoured me with a visit, at my country lodgings, he came on foot; and, as the waters were out, I asked him how he *got at me, so dry footed? He had walked upon the wall, he said; a wall not above nine inches thick, and of a considerable length!
 VOL. II. H valuable

And here let me observe, that a Frenchman eats his soupe and bouilli at twelve o'clock, drinks only with, not after his dinner, and then mixes water with his genuine wine; he lives in a fine climate, where there are not as with us, for six weeks

* In the Scotch dialect, to be at one, signifies to be with one. A lady at Bath received a letter from her husband in the public rooms, withdrew a little, and read it; upon returning to her company, and being asked how my lord did? Varry weell, said she, and he'll be at me to-morrow neet. It would be rather indelicate to repeat what a gentleman who overheard her, said, afide, for she was neither young nor handsome.

together,

together, easterly winds, which stop the pores and obstruct perspiration. A Frenchman eats a great deal, it is true, but it is not all hard meat; and they never sit and drink after dinner or supper is over.—An Englishman, on the contrary, drinks much stronger, and a variety of fermented liquors, and often much worse, and sits at it many hours after dinner, and always after supper. How then can he expect such health, such spirits, and to enjoy a long life, free from pain, as most Frenchmen do? When the negro servants in the West-Indies find their masters call after dinner for a bowl of punch extraordinary, they whisper them, (if company are present) and ask, “whether they drink for drunk, or drink for dry?” A Frenchman never drinks for drunk.—While the Englishman is earning disease and misery at his bottle, the Frenchman is embroidering a gown, or knitting a handkerchief for his mistress. I have seen a lady’s sack finely tamboured by a captain of horse, and a lady's white bosom shewn through meshes netted by the man, who made the snare, in which he was himself entangled: though he made it, he did not perhaps know the powers of it till she set it.

LETTER

L E T T E R XLV.

TH E king of France has, very wisely, ordered all the negroes, mulattoes, &c. to quit his kingdom; a circumstance which many look upon as cruel, others as unjust, and almost every body as a matter of indifference; on the contrary, I will almost venture to affirm it is the wisest and most laudable edict, he has, or perhaps will issue during the long reign which in all probability lies before him; and it is a matter well worthy of the most serious consideration of the legislature of this kingdom. I highly honour and respect the noble and humane part which Mr. Grenville Sharp took in behalf of the freedom of those people in this country. I consider him in that light as one of the watchful guardians of the freedom of the state; but if he thinks they are in all respects human creatures, in the same line with the men of other nations, I widely differ from him; I do not mean, you may be sure, to claim any superiority in colour, for black may be, and is for aught I know, full as beautiful, as red, or white: but I have lived long, and intimately, with those people, and from a perfect knowledge of their intellects and disposition, as well as their external form, I am thoroughly persuaded they are, in every respect, men of a lower order, and so made by the Creator of all things. Let us first take a view of their exteriors; Their face is scarce what we call human, their legs without any inner calf, and their broad, flat foot, and long toes (which they can use as well as we do our fingers) have much the resemblance of the Orang Outang, or Jocko, and other quadrupeds of their own climates; and all the distempers these poor wretches are subject to, are the same with ours, only laid upon them them ten-fold. In their own country they had not the small-pox till we carried it among them; but they always had the yaws, which is ten times worse, attended with three different eruptions, and is a whole year in its progress on those who survive it. Our itch too, is their Cra-craws, a most loathsome and violent disorder. As to their intellects, not one was ever born with solid sense; yet all have a degree of monkey cunning, and even monkey mischief, which often stands them in better stead than sense. They are in nature cruel, to the highest degree; and those mulattoes and free negroes, in our islands, who have estates of their own, exercise such a tyranny over their slaves, that it is beyond conception; and their acts of barbarity bring an odium on the white inhabitants of our West-India settlements, which in general they do not merit. The frequent marriages of these men here with white women, and the fucceffion of black, brown, and whity

brown people, produced by thefe very unnatural (for unnatural they are) alliances, have been better obferved in France, than
 in this once country of greater liberty.
 I laugh when I hear the deluded Weft-Indians, or, what is more common, Bri-tons (who like to keep a black man, becaufe he wears a turban), talk of the fidelity of thofe people. I never yet knew one who was not at bottom a villain. I once, indeed, knew a gentleman who had been ferved by a black faithfully, he thought, for twenty years, and who regarded him fincerely but when Quafhy ;
 found the phyficians had given his mafter over, he ftole his breeches, watch, and money from under his dying pillow, and went off with them. This attack fo roused the indignant mafter, that he recovered from his diftemper, though he never recovered his faithful black, nor his departed breeches. They are a bad, gloomy,

gloomy, bloody-minded, revengeful people, and in the course of a few centuries they will over-run this country with a race of men of the very worst sort under heaven. The American Indians, with all their scalping knives, tomahawks, &c. are men infinitely superior in all respects to the blacks of Guinea, who are the only nation we know under the sun, who support a regular trade, and barter one another for the luxuries (for they have all necessaries) of life; and, if any thing can justify their being made slaves, it is their being themselves the supporters of it. If it be urged, that these people would be better by education, &c. I assert the contrary is the truth. One WILLIAMS, who had a very liberal education, and who was author of the well known song,

“ Welcome, welcome, Brother Debtor! ”

was certainly a first rate villain. He had some parts, it is true, but no sense; he had had a good estate indeed, but lived, and died, in Spanish Town gaol, in Jamaica, rather than pay his just debts; and I have heard him say, “ Shew me a negro, and “ I will shew you a thief.” If we may give credit to authors whose veracity there is no reason to doubt, there are, in some parts of the world, creatures in almost every respect of the human form, except only that they have long tails like monkeys, and those beings are no doubt another, but lower link of men than the negroes; and I have seen an animal of the Jocko kind, when chained to a spot, contrive to get his food, which was out of his reach, by an address which many human creatures would have perished for want of abilities to put in practice. The Orang Outang walks always erect, and has no tail: his face is pale, without hair, nor is his body covered with more hair than may be found on some Europeans: they are often six feet high. The females are subject to certain

tain periodical inconveniences, and the males often pursue and ravish women. BONTIUS, a physician of France, and who lived many years in Batavia, speaking of the Orang Outang, expressly says, that he has seen them of both sexes, walking about as erect as any human creature; that neither male nor female differ in form or sex from men, but having more hair on their bodies, and being outrè in countenance and limb; nay, that the females have a sense of shame, and put themselves in the attitude of the Venus de Medicis, when they are approached by strangers; that they cried when in distress, and in short had every human power but speech. This account is confirmed by that great naturalist Mons. Buffon, who has seen the smaller sort of this animal alive. Can it be doubted, but that if a male or female of this species were to cohabit with an European of the contrary sex, they would not produce a mixed breed, and that we should in a few years be as much overrun with Outang Europangs, as we now are with the various tints of complexion, which have originated from the coast of Angola. London abounds with an incredible number of these black men, who have clubs to support those who are out of place; and every country town, nay in almost every village are to be seen a little race of mulattoes, mischievous as monkeys, and infinitely more dangerous. LINNÆUS and many other authors of veracity assert, that the Orang Outang, or Jocko (for they are all the same species), can and do converse together; and that they are so perfect that it is impossible to say whether they are to be ranked as animals, or human creatures; nor is there any doubt but that they can communicate their ideas, and signify by sounds their mutual wants or desires. Man in the state of nature does not want a copious language. I could speak the American Indian language when

I was

I was a boy among them; a language so simple that they had learnt it from their birds, and had no other method of signifying it was the break of day, but by saying cuckeruz—cuckeru—coo, from a bird which usually makes that noise at the point of day. Mons. Buffon, whose veracity cannot be doubted, says, he saw at Paris an Orang Outang, who had nothing of the impatience and mischief in his nature of the monkey; that he walked erect, received the company who came to see him courteously, and handed them into his apartment; that he sat at table, used his napkin properly, as well as his knife and fork, drank from a glass, would wait at table, and was in all respects obedient to his master, and never offered the least injury to others; that he approached strangers with respect, drank tea and wine in small quantities, and was fond of the caresses he received from his visitors. He was shewn in Paris during one summer, and in the winter winter following brought to London, where he died. In short, from a variety of travellers of unquestionable veracity, as well as from our own observations, there is reason to believe that there is a link of created beings from MAN, down to a MOLE, which, like the perspective of a distant country, is carried on by so easy a gradation, that we know not where the excellence begins; nor where to divide affinity. But enough has been said, I doubt not, to convince every rational man, that a mixture of negro blood with the natives of this country is big with great and mighty mischiefs; and that, if they are to live among us, they ought by some very severe law to be compelled to marry only among themselves, and to have no criminal intercourse whatever with people of other complexions. There is not on earth so mischievous and vicious an animal as a mule, nor in my humble opinion a worse race of men than the negroes of Africa.

Africa. I was at the making of peace with these people in Jamaica, and lived some time with them in Trelawney town afterwards, where I saw the under jaw bones of some of the company, I then was lieutenant to, fastened to their war-horns, and most of the women had the teeth from an upper jaw, drilled and strung round their wrists for bracelets; and even the son of captain Quaba their chief, a child about four years old, attempted to stab me in the belly; for while I was playing with him, he struck at me with a pointed knife, exclaiming ab beckera, beckera! i. e. ah, white man, white man! When these people made descents upon the plantations, on the north side of the island, and could carry off any white men alive, they put them to the most cruel and unheard of deaths; sometimes fixing them to stakes for the diversion of their children, and, when they called for food, cutting off steaks from their own flesh and compelling compelling them to eat it. That they should contend for their liberty in that country where they are bought and sold like a flock of sheep, or a troop of mules, cannot be wondered at; but that is no reason why they should be received here, and permitted to propagate their mischievous race among us. We have wicked streams, and streamers of human blood among us already.

L E T T E R XLVI.

I Write to you just as things come into my head, having taken very few notes, and those, as you must perceive, often without much regard to unison or time. It has this minute occurred to me, that I omitted to tell you on my journey onwards, that I visited a little town in Picardie, called Ham, where there is so strong a castle, that it may be called la petite Bastille, and which was then, and still is, full of state prisoners and debtors. To this castle there is a monstrous tower, the walls of which are thirty-six feet thick, and the height and circumference are proportionable thereto. It was built by the Connétable de St. Paul, in order to shut up his master, Charles VI. king of France, and cotemporary, I think, with our Henry V. but such are the extraor-

VOL. II. I dinary

dinary turns of all human affairs, that Monsieur le Connétable was shut up in it himself many years, and ended his days there.—The fate of this constable brings to my mind a circumstance that happened under my administration at Land-Guard Fort, when the king was pleased to trust me with the command of it. I had not been twenty-four hours in possession of what I thought a small sovereignty, before I received a letter in the following terms:

“ SIR, Having observed horses grazing
 “ on the covered way, that hath done “ apparent damage, and may do more, I “ think it my duty to inform you, that “ his majesty does not permit horses to “ feed thereon, &c. &c. (Signed)

ANTHONY GOODE,

Overseer of the Works.”

I never was more surpris'd, than to find my wings were to be thus clipped, by a civil officer of the board of ordnance. However wrong

wrong I or my horses had acted, I could not let Mr. GOODE graze so closely upon my authority, without a reprimand: I therefore wrote him an answer in terms as follow: “ that having seen a fat impudent“ looking strutting fellow about the gar“ rison, it was my order, that when his “ duty led him to communicate any thing
 “ to me relative to the works thereof,
 “ that he came himself, instead of writing “ impertinent letters.” Mr. Goode sent a copy of his letter and mine to Sir Charles Frederick; and the post following, he received from the office of ordnance, several printed papers in the king’s name, forbidding horses grazing on the WORKS, and ordering Mr. Goode to nail those orders up in different parts of the garison! But as I had not then learnt that either he, or his red-ribband master, had any authority to give out even the king’s orders, in a garison I commanded, but through my hands, I took the liberty, while Mr. Goode and his assistant-son were nailing one up opposite to my parlour window, to send for a file of men, and put them both into the black-hold, an apartment Mr. Goode had himself built, being a master-mason. By the time he had been ten minutes grazing under this covered way, he sent me a message, that he was asthmatic, that the place was too close, and that if he died within a year and a day, I must be deemed acces-sary to his death. But as I thought Mr.

Goode should have considered, that some of the poor invalids too might now and then be as subject to the asthma as he,
 it was a proper punishment, and I kept him there till he knew the duty of a foldier, as well as that of a mason; and as I would his betters, had they come down and ventured to have given out orders in a garrison under my command; but instead of getting me punished as a certain gentleman aimed at, that able general Lord Ligonier approved my conduct, and removed

removed the man to another garrison, and would have dismissed him the ordnance service, had I not become a petitioner in his favour; for he was too fat and old to work, too proud and arrogant to beg, and he and his adviser too contemptible to be angry with.—But I must return to the castle of Ham, to tell you what a dreadful black-hold there is in that tower. It is a trap, called by the French les Oubliettes, of so horrible a contrivance, that when the prisoners are to suffer in it, the mechanical powers are so constructed, as to render it impossible to be again opened, nor would it signify, but to see the body moulu, i. e. ground to peices.

There were formerly two or three Oubliettes in this castle: one only now remains; but there are still several in the Bastile.—When a criminal suffers this frightful death (for perhaps it is not very painful), he has no previous notice; but being led into the apartment, is overwhelmed in an instant. It is to be presumed, however, that none but criminals guilty of high crimes suffer in this manner, for the state prisoners in the Bastile are not only well lodged, but liberal tables are kept for them.

An Irish officer was lately enlarged from the Bastile, who had been twenty-seven years confined there; and though he found a great sum of money in the place he had concealed it in a little before his confinement, he told Colonel Cullen, of Fitz-James's regiment, that "having out lived his acquaintance with the world, as well as with men, he would willingly return there again."

At Ham the prisoners for debt are quite separated from the state prisoners; the latter are in the castle, the former in the tower.

The death of Louis XV. gave liberty to an infinite number of unhappy people, and to many who would have been enlarged before, but had been forgotten. When one of these unhappy people (a woman of fashion) was told she might go out; then, said she, I am sure Louis XV. is dead; an event she knew nothing of, though it was a full year after the king's death.—Things are otherwise conducted now than in his reign. A wicked vain woman then commanded, with unlimited power, both in war and domestic concerns: in this reign there are able, and, I believe, virtuous ministers.

I suppose you think, as I did, that Madame Pompadour governed by her own powerful charms; but that was not the case: she governed, as many other women do, by borrowed charms. She had a correspondence all over the kingdom, and offices of intelligence, where youth, beauty, and innocence, were registered, which were sent to her according to order. Upon the arrival of the goods, they were dressed and trained for use, under her inspection, till they were fit to be shown up. She had no regard to birth; for a shoe-maker's daughter* of great beauty, belonging to one of the Irish brigades, being introduced to the king, he asked her whether she knew him? No: she did not. But did you ever see me before, or any body like me? She had not, but thought him very like the face on the gros Ecus of France. Madame Pompadour soon found out which of these girls proved most agreeable to the king, and such were retained; the others dismissed.—The expence of this traffick was immense. I am assured where the difficulties

* Her name Murphy, her father was a shoe-maker, but her grandfather a gentleman, who followed king James. La petite Murphy was belle comme un Ange, and Madame Pompadour was alarmed, lest her influence should prevail too far. She was offered to a Moujquettaire, with a handsome portion, but he refused the offer with a manly contempt.

difficulties of birth or fashion fell in the way, ten thousand pounds sterling have been given. Had Lewis XV. lived a few years longer, he would have ruined his kingdom. Lewis XVI. bids fair to aggrandize it.

L E T T E R XLVII.

POST-HOUSE, ST. GEORGE, six leagues from LYONS.

I AM particular in dating this letter, in hopes that every English traveller may avoid the place I write from, by either stopping short, or going beyond it; as it is the only house of reception for travellers in the village, and the worst I have met with in my whole journey. We had been scurvily treated here as we went; but having arrived at it after dark, and leaving it early, I did not recollect it again, till the mistress, * by her sour face and sorry fare, betrayed it; for she well remembered us. As a specimen of French auberge cookery, I cannot help serving up a dish of spinage

* I hope I may be excused mentioning such trifles as surly-hofts, &c. If I should be censured, I can produce great authority; for HORACE, the immortal HORACE, did the same. I am pleased to think we travelled too as he did, the only thing in which we could imitate so great a man. “ Hoc iter ignavi divisimus,” says he.

to

to you, as it was served to me at this house. We came in early in the afternoon, and while I was in the court-yard I saw a flat basket stand upon the ground, the bottom of which was covered with boiled spinage; and as my dog, and several others in the yard, had often put their noses into it, I concluded it was put down for their food, not mine, till I saw a dirty girl patting it up into round balls; and two children, the eldest not above three years old, flavering in, and playing with it, one of whom, to lose no time, was performing an office that none could do for her. I asked the maid what she was about, and what it was she was so preparing! for I began to think I had been mistaken, till she told me it was spinage;—‘not for me, I hope,’ said I,—‘oui, pour vous et le monde.’ I then forbade her bringing any to table; and putting the little girl off her centre, by an angry push, made her almost as dirty as the spinage; and I could perceive perceive her mother, the hostess, and some French travellers who were near, looked upon me as a brute for disturbing la pauvre enfant ; nevertheless, with my entrée came up a dish of this delicate spinage, with which I made the girl a very pretty Chapeau Anglois, for I turned it, dish and all, upon her head. This set the house in such an uproar that if there had not come in an old gentleman, like a bourgeois of Paris, at that instant, I verily believe I should have been turned out ; but he engaged warmly in my defence, and insisted upon it that I had treated the girl just as he would have done, had she brought such a dirty dish to him, after being cautioned not to do so ; nor should I have got any supper, had I not prevailed on this good-natured man, who never ate any, to order a supper for himself, and transfer it to me. He was a native of Lyons, and had been, for the first time after thirty years absence, to visit his relations there.

My

My entertainment at this house, outward-bound, was half a second-hand roasted turkey, or what the sailors call a twice-laid dish, i. e. one which is done over a second time.

I know the French in general will not like to see this dirty charge, brought even against an aubergiste, and much less to hear it said, that this disregard to cleanliness is almost general in the public inns; but truth justifies it, and I hope the publication may amend it.

A modern French anonymous traveller, who I conclude, by the company he kept in England, is a man of fashion, gives in general a just account of the English nation, their customs and manners; and acknowledges, in handsome terms, the manner he was received by some of the first families in England. He owns, however, he does not understand English; yet he has the temerity to say, that Gulliver's travels

travels are the chef d'œuvre of Dean Swift; but observes, that those travels are greatly improved by passing through the hands of Desfontaines. This gentleman must excuse me in saying, that Desfontaines did not understand English, nor Dean Swift, much better than he understood the drunken member of parliament at Lord Byron's trial; and has given as much cause to laugh at his remark, as he had at the member's harangue. He concludes these ridiculous remarks with one still more absurd, by observing what a French ambassador to England said of the nation in 1523, constitutes our national character at this day! "Alas! poor England! though
 " thou be'st so closely situated, and in
 " such daily conversation with the polite
 " and polished nation of France, thou hast
 " gained nothing of their ease, breeding,
 " and compliments, in the space of two " hundred and fifty years."—What this gentleman alludes to, is the ambassador's letter

letter to the Connétable Montmorency, previous to the meeting of Henry VIII. and Francis I. near Ardres; for (says the ambaffador) sur-tout je vous prie, que vous ostiez de la Cour, ceux qui ont la reputation d'etre joyeux & gaudiffeurs car c'est bien en ce monde, la chose la plus haïe de cette nation. And in a few lines after, he foists in an extract from a Scotchman, one Barclay, who, in his Examen of Nations, says, Je ne connois point de plus amiable creature, qu'un François chez qui l'enjoüement est temperé par le jugement, & par discretion; to all which I subscribe: but such men are seldom to be met with in any kingdom.

This gentleman says, the most remarkable, or rather the only act of gaiety he met with in London, was an harangue made for an hour in the house of lords, previous to the trial of Lord Byron; and that he afterwards understood it was made by a drunken member of parliament.

He

He fays, it made him and every body laugh exceedingly; but he laughed only (I prefume) becaufe every body elfe did; and relates the ftory, I fear, merely to make it a national laugh; for the harangue was certainly very ill placed, and the mirth it produced very indecent, at a time a peer of the realm was to be brought forth accused of murder; and the untimely death of a valuable and virtuous young man revived in every body's memory.

This is the unfavourable fide of what the gentleman fays of the firft people in England. Of the peafants and lower order, he obferves, that though they are well fed, well clothed, and well lodged, yet they are all of a melancholy turn.—The French have no idea of what we call dry humour; and this gentleman, perhaps, thought the Englifh clown melancholy, while while he was laughing in his sleeve at the foppery of his laquais.

These observations put me in mind of another modern traveller, a man of sense and letters too, who observes, that the ballustrades at Westminster bridge are fixed very close together, to prevent the English getting through to drown themselves: and of a gentleman at Cambridge, who, having cut a large pigeon-hole under his closet door, on being asked the use of it, said, he had it cut for an old cat which had kittens, to go in and out; but added, that he must send for the carpenter to cut little holes for the young ones. His acute visitor instantly set up a hoarse laugh, and asked him whether the little cats could not come out at the same hole the big one did? The other laughing in his turn, said, he did not think of that.

Though I have spoken with freedom of this French traveller's remarks, yet I must own that, in general, he writes and thinks liberally, and speaks highly of the English nation, and very gratefully of many individuals to whom he was known; and I dare say a Frenchman will find many more mistakes of mine, which I shall be happy to see pointed out, or rectified: but were I to pick out the particular objects of laughter, pity, and contempt, which have fallen in my way, in twice crossing this great continent, I could make a second Joe Miller of one, and a Jane Shore of the other. If this traveller could have understood the Beggars' Opera, the humour of Sam. Foote, or the pleasantries among English sailors, watermen, and the lower order of the people, he would have known, that though the English nation have not so much vivacity as the French, they are behind-hand with no nation whatever, where true wit and genuine humour are to be displayed. What would he have said, could he have seen and entered into the spirit and humour of

of

of Mr. Garrick in the character of Scrub? Shuter, Woodward, Mrs. Clive, or the inimitable Mrs. DIDIER, and little EDWIN at Bath. Had he been capable of feeling the force of their comic powers, he would have found better matter for his risibility than he did in the House of Lords, and must have acknowledged that neither the actors, the audience, nor the nation, are such a heavy, dull, insensible people as he conceives them to be.

L E T T E R XLVIII.

FROM St. George to Maçon, is five leagues. Nothing on earth can be more beautiful than the face of this country, far and near. The road lies over a vast and fertile plain, not far distant from the banks of the Soane on one side, and adorned with mountains, equally fertile and beautiful, on the other. It is very singular that all the cows of this part of the country are white, or of a light dun colour, and the drefs of all the Maçonnois peafants as different from any other province in France, as that of the Turkish habit; I mean the women's drefs, for I perceived no difference among the men, but that they are greater clowns than any other French peafant. The women wear a broad bone lace ruff about their necks,
and

and a narrow edging of the same fort round their caps, which are in the form of the charity girls' caps in England; but as they must not bind them on with any kind of ribband, they look rather laid upon their heads, than dressed upon them; their gowns are of a very coarse light brown woollen cloth, made extremely short-waisted, and full of high and thick plaits over the hips, the sleeves are rather large, and turned up with some gaudy coloured filk: upon the shoulders are sewed several pieces of worsted livery lace, which seem to go quite under their arms, in the same manner as is sometimes put to children to strengthen their leading-strings. Upon the whole, however, the dress is becoming, and the very long petticoat and full plaits have a graceful appearance.

At Lyons I saw a Maçonnoise girl of fashion, or fortune, in this dress; her lace was fine, her gown filk, and her shoulder-strings of silver ; and, as her head had much more of the bon goût than the bon tón, I thought her the most inviting object I had seen in that city, my delicate landlady at Nismes always excepted. I think France cannot produce such another woman for beauty as Madame Seigny.

I bought a large quantity of the Maçon lace, at about eight-pence English a yard, which at a little distance cannot easily be distinguished from fine old point.

Between St. George and Maçon, at a time we wanted our breakfast, we came to a spot where two high roads cross each other, and found there a little cabin, not unlike the Iron House, as to whim ; but this was built, sides, top, and bottom, with sawed boards ; and as a little bit of a board hung out at the door informed us they sold wine, I went in, and asked the mistress permission to boil my tea-kettle, and
to

to eat our breakfast in her pretty cabin. The woman was knitting: she laid down her work, rose up, and with the ease and address of a woman of the first fashion, said we did her honour; that her house, such as it was, and every thing in it, were at our service. She then sent a girl to a farmer's, hard by, for milk, and to a village, a quarter of a league distant, for hot bread; and while we breakfasted, her conversation and good breeding made up a principal part of the repas: she had my horse too brought to the back part of her cabin, where he was well fed from a portable manger. I bought of her two bottles of white wine, not much inferior to, and much wholesomer than, Champagne, and she charged me for the whole, milk, bread, fire, conversation, and wine, thirty-six sols, about seventeen pence English! Though this gentlewoman, for so I must call her, and so I believe she is, lived in such a small hut, she seemed to be in good circumstances, and had liqueurs, tea, and a great variety of little matters to sell. This was the only public house, (if it may be called by that name) during my whole journey out and in, where I found perfect civility: not that the publicans in general have not civility in their possession, but they will not, either from pride or design, produce it, particularly to strangers. My wooden-house landlady, indeed, was a prodigy; and it must be confessed, that no woman of the lower order in England, nor even of the middling class, have any share of that ease and urbanity which is so common among the lower order of the people of this kingdom: but the woman I now speak of, had not, you will perceive, the least design even upon my purse. I made no previous agreement with her for my good fare, and she scorned to take any advantage of my confidence; and I shewed my sense of it, by giving her little maid eight times more than she ever received received for such services before—an English shilling.

Let not this single, and singular woman, however, induce you to trust to the conscience of a French aubergiste, especially a female; you may as well trust to the conscience of an itinerant Jew. Frenchmen are so aware of this, that I have heard a traveller, on a maigre day, make his bargain for his omelette, and the number of eggs to be put in it, with an exactness scarce to be imagined; and yet the upshot was only two pence English.

The easy manner in which a French officer, or gentleman, can traverse this mighty kingdom, either for pleasure or business, is extremely agreeable, and worthy of imitation among young British officers.—In England, if an Ensign of foot is going a journey, he must have two horses, and a groom, though he has nothing but a regimental mental suit of clothes, and half a dozen shirts to carry : his horses too must set both ends well, because he is a Captain upon the road ; and he travels at about five times the expence of his pay,

The French officer buys a little bidet, puts his shirts and best regimental coat into a little portmanteau, buckles that behind his saddle, and with his sword by his side, and his croix at his button-hole, travels at the expence of about three shillings a day, and often less, through a kingdom where every order of people shew him attention, and give him precedence.

I blush when I recollect that I have rode the risque of being wet to the skin, because I would not disgrace my saddle, nor load my back with a great coat ; for I have formerly, as well as latterly, travelled without a servant.

I have

I have a letter now before me, which I received a few days ago from a French captain of foot who says sur le champ j'ay fait seller ma petite Rossinante (car vous sçavez que j'ay acheté un petit cheval de 90 livres sellé et bridé) et me voila a Epernay chez Monsieur Locket, &c. This gentleman's whole pay does not amount to more than sixty pounds a year, yet he has always five guineas in his pocket, and every convenience, and some luxuries about him; he assists now and then an extravagant brother, appears always well dressed; and last year I bought him a ticket in the British lottery. He did not consider that he employed an unfortunate man to buy it, and I forgot to remind him of it.

After saying thus much of a virtuous young man (though a Frenchman), there will be no harm in telling you his name is Lalieu, a captain in the regiment du Maine.—Before I took my last leave of him, him, talking together of the horrors of war, I asked him what he would do if he were to see me vis-a-vis in an hostile manner? He embraced me, and said, “ turn the “ butt end of my fusée towards you, my “ friend.” I thank God that neither his butt-end, nor my muzzle can ever meet in that manner, and I shall be happy to meet him in any other.

P. S. I omitted to say, that the Maçonnoise female peasants wear black hats, in the form of the English straw or chip hats; and when they are tied on under the chin, it gives them, with the addition of their round-eared laced cap, a decent, modest appearance, which puts out of countenance all the borrowed plumage, dead hair, black wool, lead, grease, and yellow powder, which is now in motion between Edinburgh and Paris.

It is a pity that pretty women, at least, do not know that the simplicity of a quaker's head-dress is superior to all that art can contrive: and those who remember the elegant Miss Fido, a woman of that persuasion, will subscribe to the truth of my assertion. And it is still a greater pity, that plain women do not know, that the more they adorn and artify their heads, the more conspicuous they make their natural defects.

L E T T E R X L I X .

AT Challons sur la Soane (for there is another town of the same name in Champagne), I had the honor of a visit from Monf. le Baron Skortall, a gentleman of an ancient family, rather in distress at this time, by being kept out of six-and-thirty thousand a year, his legal property in Ireland; but as the Baron made his visit à la mode de capuchin Friar, without knocking, and when only the female part of my family were in the apartment, he was dismissed rather abruptly for a man of his high rank, and great fortune in expectation. This dismissal, however, did not dismay him; he rallied again, with the reinforcement of Madame la Baronne, the daughter, a he positively affirmed, of Monf. de Prince de Monaco; but as I had forbid his being shown up, he desired me to come down, a summons

summons curiosity induced me to obey. Never, surely, were two people of fashion in a more pitiable plight! he was in a ruffet brown black suit of clothes; Madame la Baronne in much the same colour, wrapt up in a tattered black silk capuchin; and I knew not which to admire most, their folly or their impudence. Surely never did an adventurer set out with less capabilities about him; his whole story was so flagrant a fib, that in spite of the very respectable certificates of Lord Mayor, John Wilkes, and Mr. Alderman Bull, I was obliged to tell him plainly, that I did not believe him to be a gentleman, nor his wife to be a relation of the Prince of Monaco. All this he took in good part, and then assured me they were both very hungry, and without meat or money; I therefore ordered a dinner at twenty sols a head; and, as I sat by while they eat it, I had reason to believe that he told me one plain truth, for in truth they eat as if they they had never eaten before. After dinner the baron did me the honour to consult with me how he should get down to Lyons? I recommended to him to proceed by water:—but, said he, my dear Sir, I have no money;—an evil I did not choose to redress; and, after several unsuccessful attempts at my purse, and some at my person— he whispered me that even six livres would be acceptable; but I held out, and got off, by proposing that the baroness should write a letter to the prince her father, to whom I had the honour to be known, and that I would carry him the letter, and enforce their prayer by making it my own. This measure she instantly complied with, and addressed her father adorable Prince; but concluded it with a name which could not belong to her either as maid, wife, or widow. I remarked this to the baron, who acknowledged at once the mistake, said she had signed a false name, and she should write it over again; but when

when I observed to him, that as the prince knew the hand-writing of his own dear child, and as the name of women is often varying by marriage or miscarriage, it was all one. To this he agreed; and I brought off the letter, and my purse too, for forty sols; yet there was so much falsehood, folly, and simplicity in this simple pair of adventurers, that I forely repented I did not give them their passage in the coche d'eau to Lyons; for he could not speak a word of French, nor Madame la Baronne a word of English; and the only badge of distinction between them was, a vast clumsy brass-hilted sword which the baron, instead of wearing at his side, held up at his nose, like a physician's gold-headed cane.—When I took my leave of this Sir James Shortall (for he owned at last he was only a baronet), he promised to meet me next time dressed in his blue and silver.

I verily believe my Irish adventurer at Perpignan is a gentleman, and therefore I relieved him; I am thoroughly persuaded my Challons adventurer is not, yet perhaps he was a real object of charity, and his true tale would have produced him better success than his borrowed story. Sir James was about sixty, Lady Shortall about fifty. —Sir James too had a pretty large property in America, and would have visited his estates on that continent, had I not informed him of the present unhappy differences now subsisting between that and the mother country, of which he had not heard a single syllable.

After having said thus much, I think I must treat you with a copy of Lady Shortall's letter, a name very applicable to their unhappy situation, for they did indeed seem short of every thing;—so here it is, verbatim et literatim:

“ Monsieur

“ Monsieur Thickness gentilhomme anglaise

“ Adorable preince de monaco que tout “ mordonne démé, lifé au de fus de cette “ lette le non deun digne homme qui me “ randu fer viffe, je fuis malade, le con“ vant ; ferois préférable à mon bouneur “ je veux sepandant fauvé mon marij mais “ je me meure tre fevé mon derinier “ foupire, je ne le doit qua vous.

“ JULIE BARONNE DE CHATTERRE.

“ le 18 may 1776.”

“ *A font alteffele preince de Monaco, dans font
“ hautelle rue de Vareinne à Paris.*”

P. S. Had Madame Shortall been really a poor relation of the Prince of Monaco's, I should have been happy to have been her ambassador; for about twelve years ago he took a fancy to a most excellent English mare, which he had often seen me out upon when the late king of France hunted in the forest of St. Germaine, and when he understood I was leaving France, he offered to buy her; and after fixing two or three different days to come to my house to examine her, and breaking his word, at length came after it was dark, and very graciously offered me just half what she cost me in London; nor was that half her real value. This Prince coming into London by way of Westminster Bridge after the lamps were lighted, lifted up his hands—"My God," says he, "I am quite ashamed to see so much attention shewn me at my first entrance into such a metropolis;"—but his surprize would have been better placed, if he had said so in going out. Notwithstanding he perceived the indignant manner I received his proposal of giving me fifteen guineas for my mare, he rode up to me a few days after, and with a smiling countenance,

Quinze

Quinze guinées, Monf. Tigney, faid he, pour votre jument—we had both been thrown out of the fport, and were alone. I therefore put fpirs to my mare, and ſhe gave him a very proper anfwer in rear; and the only reply he had to ſuch repeated rudeneſs, and the only rëply he merited. He had an immense fortune with his agreeable wife, whom he has put from him, and his annual income is faid to be fifty thouſand pounds. He keeps two or three English murdor mark't grooms, whom he employs to buy all the English horſes they can meet with at the price he offered me. Theſe he dreſſes up, and ſells to ignorant Frenchmen for ſixty or ſeventy pounds a piece. As he was always of the late king's ſupper party; I had been informed that the king faid (when he talked of purchaſing my mare), if that Englishman does not take care Monaco will jockey him—the king was miſtaken (as kings sometimes are); but it is to be hoped this caution may be of service to all Englishmen in future not to be jockeyed by a French prince, under the disguise of a horse-dealer.

L E T T E R L.

FROM Challons to Bonne is five leagues. Bonne is a good town, well walled-in, pleasantly situated, and remarkable for an excellent and well-conducted hospital, where the poor sick are received gratis, without distinction, and where the rich sick are accommodated with nurses, physicians, medicines, food, and lodging, with every assistance that can be wanted, for four livres a day. The apartments in which the poor are received are so perfectly clean and sweet, that they are fit for people of any condition; but those provided for the better sort are indeed sumptuously furnished. The women who act as nurses are of a religious order, and wear a particular, decent, and uniform habit, to which their modest deportment exactly coincides; yet most of them are young, and many of them very beautiful.

Between these two towns we met an English servant in a rich laced livery, conducting, behind a post-chaise, a large quantity of baggage; and soon after, a second servant in the same uniform. This excited our curiosity, and we impatiently proceeded, in hopes of meeting the equipage, which it was natural to expect would soon follow: instead of which, it was an old English four-wheel chaise, the contents of which were buckled close up behind a pair of dirty leather curtains; and on the coach-box sat, by the side of the driver, a man who had the appearance of an English farmer. This contrast rather increased than lessened our curiosity; and, therefore, at Bonne, I made some enquiry about them of the post-master; who told me they came in and set off separately, just as I had met them; but that one servant

vant paid for the horses to all the carriages, and that the woman behind the curtain, according to custom, did not choose to shew herself. Just as I was returning with this blind account, an English servant, whom I had not perceived, but who stood near, told me, he was sure as how it was either the Duchess of Kingston or Mrs. Rudd, for that he seed her very plain. I was much surpris'd at finding an Englishman so near me; and the singularity of the man's observation had a very forcible effect upon me. When the mirth which it unavoidably occasioned was a little subsided, I could not help correcting, in gentle terms (though I was otherwise glad to see even an English footman so far from English land), a man in his station, for speaking of people of high rank with so much indecent levity, and then told him, that there was no such person living as the Duchess of Kingston, but that it was probable the lady he thought

thought he had seen might be Lady Bristol; that there was not, however, the least resemblance between the person of her ladyship, and the other lady he had mentioned, the latter being young, thin, and rather handsome; whereas Lady Bristol was very fat and advanced in years; I therefore suspected, I told him, that he had confounded the trials of those two ladies, and fancied he saw a likeness in their persons by an association of ideas; but in reality, there was as much difference in their crimes as in their persons. Crimes! did I say? that is an improper expression, because I am informed Mrs. Rudd has been acquitted; but that, if the foreign papers might be relied on, Lady Bristol had been found guilty of BIGAMY: but as he seemed not to understand what I meant by bigamy, or the association of ideas, I was unavoidably led into a conversation and explanation with this young man; which nothing but my pride, and his his ignorance, could justify; but as the fellow was overjoyed to see me, I could not help giving him something to drink, and with it a caution never to speak of people of high rank and condition, even behind their backs, but under their proper names or titles, and with decency and respect. He then begged my pardon, and assured me, if he had known that either of the ladies had been a friend of mine, he would not have coupled them so improperly together; and I am thoroughly convinced, the man left me with a resolution never to hazard a conjecture without a better foundation than that he started to me, and which I rather believe he hit off extempore, to speak to me, and shew himself my countryman, than from really suspecting that the woman behind the curtain was either Lady Bristol, or Mrs. Rudd; though I was inclined to think it very probable, for I had seen Lord Bristol on his way through Lyons from Italy to England, land, and had been informed Lady Bristol was then on her road to Italy; in which case I, like the footman, had my conjectures, and accounted for the leather curtains being so closely buckled to.

These are trifling remarks, you will say; but if a sign-painter can paint only a bear, those who employ him must have a bear for their sign; nevertheless we have all a certain curiosity to know even the most trifling actions, or movements, of people who by their virtues or vices, especially if they are people of rank or condition, have occasioned much talk in the world; and therefore, ridiculous as this incident is, yet as we have long known one of the ladies, and often admired both, I could not let either one or the other pass me unnoticed, on a road too, where even an English duchess (if she would own the truth) would feel a secret delight in meeting a Hyde-park-corner groom.

I have

I have already mentioned what partiality and degree of notice countrymen take of each other when they meet far from home. That notice is always in proportion to the distance. Had my Bonne footman spoken of Lady Bristol, or Mrs. Rudd, in such free terms as how he feed'em, &c. &c. at Hyde-park-corner, or in Tyburn-road, I should have knocked him down with the butt end of my whip; but at Bonne (five hundred miles from either of those places) he and I were quatre cousins; and I could not help treating him with a bottle of vin du pais.

L E T T E R L I.

FROM Bonne we intended to have taken the high road to Dijon; but being informed that there was another, though not much frequented, by way of Autun, and that that town, which was a Roman colony, still contained many curious monuments worthy of notice, we pursued the latter, which twisted in between a vast variety of small, but fertile vallies, watered with brooks, bounded by romantic hills, and some high mountains, most of which were covered with vines, which did produce the most delicious red wine in the world; I say did produce, for the high goût and flavour of the Burgundy grape has for many years failed, and perhaps so as never to return again. We, however, missed the road to Autun, and, after four leagues journey through a most delightful delightful country, we arrived at a miserable auberge, in a dirty village called Yozzy, which stands upon the margin of a large forest, in which, some years since, the diligence from Lyons to Paris was attacked by a banditti, and the whole party of travellers were murdered. Ever since that fatal day, a guard of the Maréchaussée always escort the diligence through this deep and dreadful forest (so they called it), and we were persuaded it was right to take a couple of the Maréchaussée, and did so; but as we found the forest by no means so long, deep, or dreadful, as it had been represented, we suspected that the advice given us was more for the sake of the men who guarded us, than from any regard to us. Two men could have made no great resistance against a banditti; and a single man would hardly have meddled with us.

The next day we passed through Arnay-le-Duc, a pretty country village, three leagues leagues from Rozy; and it being their annual fair-day, we had an opportunity of seeing all the peasantry dressed in their best, and much chearfulness not only in the town, but upon the road before we arrived, and after we passed it. Among the rest of the company were a bear and a monkey, or rather what Buffon calls the magot. I desired the show-man to permit my magot, as he was the least, the youngest, and the stranger, to pay a visit to Mons. Magot, the elder, who embraced the young gentleman in a manner which astonished and delighted every body, myself only excepted; but as my young gentleman seemed totally indifferent about the old one, I suspected he had really met his father, and I could not help moralizing a little.

From Arnay-le-Duc we passed through Maupas, Salou, Rouvray, Quisse la forge, and Vermanton to Auxerre, the town where

where the French nobleman was said to live, whom Dr. Smollet treated so very roughly, and who, in return, was so polite as to help to tie the Doctor's baggage behind his coach!

About a quarter of a mile without this town stands a royal convent, richly endowed, and delightfully situated; the walls of which take in near twenty acres of land well planted, on the banks of a river. And here I left my two daughters, to perfect themselves in the French language, as there was not one person within the convent, nor, that I could find, within the town, who could speak a word of English. And here I must not omit to tell you how much I was overcome with the generosity of this virtuous, and I must add amiable, society of religieuses. Upon my first enquiry about their price for board, lodging, washing, clothes, and, in short, every thing the children did, or might want, they required a sum much beyond the limits of my scanty income to give; but before we left them, they became acquainted with some circumstances, which induced them to express their concern that the price I had offered (not half what they had demanded) could not be taken. We therefore retired, and had almost fixed the children in a cheaper convent, but much inferior in all respects, within the town, when we received a polite letter from the lady abbess, to say, that after consulting with her sisterhood, they had come to a resolution to take the children at our own price, rather than not shew how much they wished to oblige us. Upon this occasion we were all admitted within the walls of the convent; and I had the pleasure of seeing my two daughters joined to an elegant troop of about forty genteel children, and of leaving them under the care of the same number of religieuses. And yet these good people knew nothing of us but what we ourselves communicated to them, not being known, nor knowing any person in the town *.—The lady abbess of this convent is a woman of high rank, about twenty-four years of age, and possesses as large a share of beauty as any reasonable woman, even on the outside of a convent, could wish for.

of

Auxerre is a good town, pleasantly situated, and in a plentiful and cheap country.

From Auxerre to Joigni is five leagues. La Petite Belle Vûe on the banks of the river is very pleasantly situated, but a dreadful one within side, in every respect; being a mixture of dirt, ignorance, and imposition; but it is the only inn for travellers, and therefore travellers should avoid it. In order to put my old hostess

* The minute, however, they suspected a war between the two nations, they inquired upon the children being taken away; and as I knew their information was good, it made mine the better.—See the Appendix.

in good humour, I called early for a bottle of Champagne; and in order to put me into a bad humour, she charged me the next day for two; but I charged her with Monf. le Connétable, who behaved like a gentleman, though I think he was only un marchand de tonnelier; but then he was a wine, not beer cooper, who hooped the old lady's barrel.

Wherever I was ill used or imposed upon, I always sent a pretty heavy packet by the post, after I had run down a hundred miles or two, by way of draw-back upon my host, and recompence to the king's high road; for in France,

“ Like the Quakers' by-way,
 “ 'Tis plain without turnpikes, so “ nothing to pay.”

LETTER

L E T T E R . LII.

THE next town of any note is Sens, a large, ragged, ancient city; but adorned with a most noble Gothic cathedral, more magnificent than even that of Rbeims, and well worthy of the notice of strangers. It is said to have been built by the English. With the relicks and custodiams of the host, are shewn the sacerdotal habits in which Archbishop Becket (who resided there many years) said mass; for it was his head-quarters, when he left Britain, as well as Julius Cæsar's, before he went thither. The silver hasps, and some of the ornaments of these garments, are still perfect, though it has undergone so many darnings as to be little else.

Becket was a very tall man; for though it has many tucks in it, yet it is generally too long for the tallest priest in the town, who constantly says mass in it on St. Thomas's day, i. e. St. Thomas a Becket's day*.

How times and men are changed ! This town, which resisted the arms of Cæsar for a considerable time, was put in the utmost consternation by Dr. Smollett's causing his travelling blunderbuss to be only fired in the air, a circumstance “ which greatly terrified all the petit monde!” It is very singular, that the doctor should have frightened a French nobleman of Burgundy, by shaking his cane at him, and even made him assist in the most servile offices ; and in the next town, terrify all the common people, by only firing a blunderbuss in the air !

* Our high church gentry still keep an account of those days, in hopes one day or other of recovering her dominion ; and, if we go on as we have done for some years past, they are in the right—nous sommes en bon train.

I would

I would not willingly arraign a dead man of telling two fibs so close upon the back of each other; but I am sure there was but that single French nobleman in this mighty kingdom, who would have submitted to such insults as the Doctor says he treated him with; nor any other town but Sens, where the firing of a gun would have so terrified the inhabitants; for drums, guns, and noise of every sort, seem to afford the common French people infinite pleasure.

I passed in this town a day or two, and part of that time with a very agreeable Scotch family, of the name of Macdonald, where Lieutenant Colonel Stuart was then upon a visit.

I have some reason to think that Sens is a very cheap town. Several English, Scotch, and Irish families reside in it.

From Sens to Pont sur Yonne is three leagues ; and from Yonne to Fouffart the same distance.

At the Three Kings at Fouffart, suspecting there was a cat behind the bed in wait for my bird, I found, instead thereof, a little narrow door, which was artfully hid, and which opened into another room; and as I am sure the man is a cheat, I suspect too, that upon a good occasion, he would have made some use of his little door.

Fouffart is a small place, consisting only of three or four public houses. From thence to Moret is three leagues, on which road is erected a noble pillar of oriental marble, in memory of the marriage of Lewis XV. Soon after we passed this monument, we entered into the delightful forest of Fontainebleau; and passing three leagues to the centre of it, we arrived

arrived at that ancient royal palace: it stands very low, and is surrounded by a great many fine pieces of water, which, however, render the apartments very damp. The king and royal family had been there six weeks, and were gone but ten days; and with them, all the furniture of the palace was also gone, except glasses, and a few pictures, of no great value. In a long gallery are placed, on each side of the wall, a great number of stag's heads, carved in wood, and upon them are fixed the horns of stags and bucks, killed by the late and former kings; some of which are very outré, others singularly large and beautiful.

Fontainebleau is a good town; stands adjacent to the palace: and as the gardens, park, &c. are always open, it is a delightful summer residence. We stayed a few days there, to enjoy the shady walks, and to see the humours of a great annual fair, which commenced

commenced the day after we arrived. All sorts of things are sold at this fair; but the principal business is done in the wine way, many thousand pieces of inferior Burgundy wine being brought to this market.

We made two little day's journey from Fontainebleau to Paris, a town I entered with concern, and shall leave with pleasure.—As I had formerly been of some service to Faucaut, who keeps the Hôtel d'York, when he lived in Ruë de Mauvais Garçon, I went to this famous Hôtel, which would have been more in character, if he had given it the name of his former street, and called it l'Hotel de Mauvais Garçon, for it is an hospital of bugs and vermin. The fellow has got the second-hand beds of Madame Pompadour upon his first floor, which he modestly asks thirty Louis d'ors a month for! All the rest of the apartments are pigeon-holes, filled with fleas, bugs, bugs, and dirt; and should a fire happen, there is no way of escaping. Nothing should be more particularly attended to in Paris than the security from fire, where so many, and such a variety of strangers, and their servants, are shut up at night, within one Porte Cochere.

L E T T E R LIII.

PARIS.

I Found no greater alteration in Paris, after ten years absence from it, than the prodigious difference of expence: most articles, I think, are one-third dearer, and many double. A horse is not half so well fed or lodged at Paris as at London; but the expence is nearly a guinea a week; and a stranger may drive half round the city before he can lodge himself and his horses under the same roof.

The beauties, the pleasures, and variety of amusements, which this city abounds with, are, without doubt, the magnets which attract so many people of rank and fortune of all nations to it; all which are too well known to be pointed out by me*.

—To

* But it may not be amiss to shew what a native says of this great city of pleasure and sadness:

T'out

—To a person of great fortune, in the hey-day of life, Paris may be preferable even to London ; but to one of my age and walk

Tout ce que l'histoire & les fables
 Ont inventé de plus exquis, D'Eden les bosquets agréables,
 D'Armide les jardins fleuris,
 L'effain léger, brillant de beautés préférables
 A Cythère, au ferrail, aux graces, aux houris,
 Des chars étincelans, des palais admirables,
 Qui charment les regards des connoisseurs surpris ;
 Et des délices comparables
 Aux douceurs que l'on goute aux célestes lambris :
 De Paris, telles sont les couleurs véritables ;
 Et j'en laisse à penser bien plus que je n'en dis.
 Mais hélas ! dans ces lieux, si beaux, si délectables,
 Par le riche habités, par le luxe embellis,
 Les fourbes, les Laïs, les veaux d'or & les diables.
 Trouvent eux seuls leur paradis.
 Assemblage étonnant de palais & de boue,
 Où le crime triomphe, où la sagesse échoue,
 O Paris ! dans tes murs se trouvent réunis
 Des objets séparés par des points infinis :
 La bassesse, l'orgueil, le sçavoir, l'ignorance,
 Les vices, les vertus, le luxe & l'indigence.
 Là, je vois s'élançer sur un char radieux ;
 Le faquin fortuné plus brillant que les dieux ;
 Ici, le citoyen au genre humain utile,
 Sous le joug des travaux courbant un front docile,
 Avec peine échappé du fracas de ce char,
 Meurt de faim, quand le fat s'enivre de nectar.

in life, it is, and was ten years ago, the least agreeable place I have seen in France.—Walking the streets is extremely dangerous, riding in them very expensive; and when those things which are worthy to be seen (and much there is very worthy) have been seen, the city of Paris becomes a melancholy residence for a stranger who neither plays at cards, dice, or deals in the principal manufacture of the city; i. e. ready-made love, a business which is carried on with great success, and with more decency, I think, than even in London. The English ladies are weak enough to attach themselves to, and to love, one man. The gay part of the French women love none, but receive all, pour passer le tems.—The English, unlike the Parisian ladies, take pains to discover who they love; the French women to dissemble with those they hate.

It is extremely difficult for even strangers of rank or fortune, to get among the first people,

people, so as to be admitted to their suppers; and without that, it is impossible to have any idea of the luxury and style in which they live. Quantity, variety, and show, are more attended to in France than neatness. It is in England alone, where tables are served with real and uniform elegance; but the appetite meets with more provocatives in France; and the French cuisine, in that respect, certainly has the superiority.

Ten years ago I had the honour to be admitted often to the table of a lady of the first rank. On St. Anne's-day (that being her name-day) she received the visits of her friends, who all brought either a valuable present, a posy, or a compliment in verse. When the dessert came upon the table, which was very magnificent, the middle plate seemed to be the finest and fairest fruit (peaches), and I was much surpris'd, that none of the ladies were helped

helped by the gentlemen from that plate: but my surprife was soon turned into aftonifhment! for the peaches fuddenly burft forth, and played up the Saint's name, (St. Anne), in artificial fire-works! and many pretty devices of the fame kind were whirled off from behind the coaches of her vifitors, to which they were fixed, as the company left the houfe; which had a pretty effect, and was no indelicate way of taking a French leave.

There is certainly among the French people of fafhion an eafe and good-breeding which is very captivating, and not eafily obtained, but by being bred up with them from an early age: the whole body muft be formed for it, as in dancing, while there is the pliability of youth; and where there is, as in France, a constant, early, and intimate correpondence between the two fexes. Men would be fierce and favage were it not for the fociety of the other

other sex, as may be seen among the Turks and Moors, who must not visit their own wives when other men's wives are with them. In France, the lady's bed-chamber is always open, and she receives visits in bed, or up, with perfect ease. A noble lord, late ambassador to this country, told me, that when he visited a young and beautiful woman of fashion (I think too it was a first visit after marriage), she received him sitting up in her bed; and before he went, her fille de chambre brought his lordship Madame le Comtesse's shift, elegantly festooned, which his lordship had the honour to put over the lady's head, as she sat in bed;—nor was there, by that favour, the least indecency meant; it was a compliment intended; and, as such only, received. Marks of favour of that sort, are not marks of further favours from a French lady.

In this vast city of amusements, among the other arts, I cannot help pointing out to your particular notice, Richlieu's monument in the Sorbonne, as an inimitable piece of modern sculpture * by Girardeau; and Madame da la Valiere's full-length portrait by Le Brun: she was, you know, mistress to Louis XIV. but retired to the convent in which the picture now is, and where she lived in repentance and sorrow above thirty years †.

The connoisseurs surely can find no reasonable fault with the monumental artist; but they do, I think, with Le Brun: the drapery, they say, is too full, and that she is overcharged with garments; but fulness

* VOLTAIRE says, this monument is not sufficiently noticed by strangers.

† MADAME VALIERE, during her retirement, being told of the death of one of her sons, replied, "I should rather grieve for his birth, than his death."

of dress adds not only dignity, but decency, to the person of a fine woman, who meant (or the painter for her) to hide, not to expose her charms.

If fulness be a fault, it is a fault that Gainsborough, Hoare, Pine, Reynolds, and many others of our first modern geniuses are guilty of; and if it be a sin, the best judges will acquit them for committing it, where dignity is to be considered.

Madame Valiere appears to have been scattering about her jewels, is tearing her hair, crying, and looking up to the heavens, which seem bursting forth a tempest over her head. The picture is well imagined, and finely executed.

I found upon the bulk of a portable shop in Paris, a most excellent engraving from this picture, and which carried me directly to visit the original; it is indeed stained and dirty, but it is infinitely superior to a later engraving which now hangs up at all the print shops, and I suppose is from the first plate, which was done soon after the picture was finished. Under it are written the following ingenious, though, I fear, rather impious lines :

Magdala dum gemmas, baccisque monile coruscum
Projicit, ac formæ detrahit arma suæ :
Dum vultum lacrymis et lumina turbat ; amoris
Mirare infidias ! hac capit arte Deum.

Shall I attempt to unfold this writer's meaning? Yes, I will, that my friend at Oxford may laugh, and do it as it ought to be done.

I.

The pearls and gems, her beauty's arms,
See sad VALIERE foregoes ;
And now assumes far other charms
Superior still to those.

II.

The tears that flow adown her cheek,
Than gems are brighter things ;
For these an earthly Monarch seek,
But those the KING of Kings.

This

This seems to have been the author's thought, if he thought chastely—Shall I try again?

The pearls and gems her beauty's arms,
 See sad VALIERE foregoes :
 Yet still those tears have other charms,
 Superior far to those :
 With those she gain'd an earthly Monarch's love :
 With these she wins the KING of Kings above.

Yet, after all, I do suspect, that the author meant more than even to sneer a little at poor Madame Valiere ; but, as I dislike common-place poetry (and poetry, as you see, dislikes me), I will endeavour to give you the literal meaning, according to my conception, and then you will see whether our joint wits jump together.

While MAGDALENE throws by her bracelets, adorned with gems and pearls, and (thus) disarms her beauty : while tears confound her countenance, and eyes

With wonder mark the stratagems of love ;
 'Tis thus she captivates the GOD above.

The impious insinuation of the Latin lines, is the reason, I suppose, why they were omitted under the more modern impression of this fine print, and very middling French poetry superseding them.

L E T T E R L I V .

PARIS.

I F you do not use Herries's bills, I commend to you at Paris, a French, rather than English banker: I have found the former more profitable, and most convenient. I had, ten years since, a letter of credit on Sir John Lambert, for 300l. from Mess. Hoares. The Knight thought proper, however, to refuse the payment of a twenty pound draft I gave upon him; though I had not drawn more than half my credit out of his hands. Monf. Mary, on whom I had a draft from the same respectable house, this year, will not do such things; but, on the contrary, be ready to serve and oblige strangers, to the utmost of his power: he speaks and writes English very well, and will prove an agreeable and useful acquaintance to a stranger in Paris. His sister too, who lives with him,

N 4

him, will be no less so to the female part of your family. His house is in la Rue Saint Sauveur.

The English bankers pay in silver, and it is necessary to take a wheel-barrow with you to bring it away. A small bag will do at the French banker's.

There is as much difference between the bankers of London, and English bankers in Paris, as between a rotten apple and a sound one. You can hardly get a word from a London banker, but you are sure of getting your money: in Paris you will get words enough, and civil ones too. Remember, however, I am speaking only of the treatment I have experienced. There may be, and are, no doubt, English bankers at Paris of great worth, and respectable characters.

It is not reckoned very polite to frequent coffee-houses at Paris; but the politeness
of

of Monsieur and Madame Felix, au caffé de Conti, opposite the Pont Neuf, and the English news-papers, render their house a pleasant circumstance to me; and it is by much the best, and best situated, of any in Paris, pour voir passer le monde.

I am astonished, that where such an infinite number of people live in so small a compass (for Paris is by no means so large as London). they should suffer the dead to be buried in the manner they do, or within the city. There are several burial pits in Paris, of a prodigious size and depth, in which the dead bodies are laid, side by side, without any earth being put over them till the ground tier is full; then, and not till then, a small layer of earth covers them, and another layer of dead comes on, till by layer upon layer, and dead upon dead, the hole is filled with a mass of human corruption, enough to breed a plague. These places are enclosed,

it

it is true, within high walls ; but nevertheless, the air cannot be improved by it ; and the idea of such an assemblage of putrifying bodies in one grave, so thinly covered, is very disagreeable. The burials in churches too, often prove fatal to the priests and people who attend ; but every body, and every thing in Paris, is so much alive, that not a soul thinks about the dead.

I wish I had been born a Frenchman.— Frenchmen live as if they were never to die. Englishmen die all their lives ; and yet, as Louis XIV. said, “ I do not think “ it is so difficult a matter to die, as men “ generally imagine, when they try in “ earnest.” I am sure there is one great consolation in death, i. e. getting rid of an infinite number of rascals by God’s coup de main.

I must tell you before I leave Paris, that I slept over to Marli, to see the queen :
I had

I had seen the king nine years ago; but he was not then king over eight millions of people, and the finest country under the sun; yet he does not seem to lay so much stress upon his mighty power as might be expected from so young a prince, but appears grave and thoughtful. I am told he attends much to business, and endeavours to make his subjects happy. His resolution to be inoculated immediately after succeeding to such a kingdom, is a proof of his having a great share of fortitude. In England such a determination would have been looked upon with indifference; but in France, where the bulk of the people do not believe that it secures the patient from a second attack; where the clergy in general consider it as unfavourable, even in a religious light; and where the physical people, for want of practice, do not understand the management of the distemper, so as it is known in England; I may venture to say, without without being charged with flattery, that it was an heroic resolution: add to this, the king's knowing, that if his subjects followed his example, it must be chiefly done by their own surgeons and physicians, so he put himself under their management alone, though I think Sutton was then at Paris.

The queen is a fine figure, handsome, and very sprightly; dresses in the present gout of head dress, and without a handkerchief, and thereby displays a most lovely neck.

I saw in a china shop at Paris, the figure of the king and queen finely executed, and very like, in china: the king is playing on the harp, and the queen dropping her work to listen to the harmony. The two figures, about a foot high, were placed in an elegant apartment, and the tout ensemble was the prettiest toy I ever beheld—the price thirty guineas.
and

I shall leave this town in a few days, and take the well-known and well-beaten route Anglaise for Calais, through Chantilly, Ameins, and Boulogn, and then I shall have twice crossed this mighty kingdom.

L E T T E R LV.

CALAIS.

I Am now returning to the point from whence I fet out, and rather within the revolution of one year; which, upon the whole, though I met with many untoward circumstances, has been the most interesting and entertaining year of my whole life, and will afford me matter of reflection for the little which remains unfinished of that journey we are all taking, and which sooner or later brings us to the place from whence no traveller returns.—And now, having said so much of myself, I am sure you will be glad to change the subject from man to beast, especially to such a one as I have now to speak of.

I told you, when I fet out, that I had bought a handsome-looking English horse for

for seven guineas, but a little touched in his wind; I can now inform you, that when I left this town, he was rather thin, and had a sore back and shoulder; both which, by care and caution, were soon healed, and that he is returned fair and fat, and not a hair out of its place, though he drew two grown persons, two children, (one of thirteen, the other ten years old) a very heavy French cabriolet, and all our baggage, nay, almost all my goods, chattels, and worldly property whatever, outward and homeward, except between Lyons and Pont St. Esprit, Cette and Barcelona, going, and Lyons and this town returning! I will point out to you one of his day's work, by which you will be able to judge of his general power of working. At Perpignan I had, to save him, hired post-horses to the first town in Spain, as I thought it might be too much for him to ascend and descend the Pyrenees in one day; beside sixteen miles to the foot of them, them, on this side, and three to Jonquiere on the other ; but after the horses were put to, the post-master required me to take two men to Boulou, in order to hold the chaise, and to prevent its over-turning in crossing the river near that village. Such a flagrant attempt to impose, determined me to take neither horses nor men ; and at seven o'clock I set off with Callée (that is my houyhnhm's name), and arrived in three hours at Boulou, a paltry village, but in a situation fit for the palace of AUGUSTUS!

So far from wanting men from Perpignan to conduct my chaise over the river, the whole village were, upon our arrival, in motion after the job. We, however, passed it, without any assistance but our own weight to keep the wheels down, and the horse's strength and sturdiness, to drag us through it. In about three hours more we passed over the summit of this great

great chain of the universe; and in two more, arrived at Jonquiere: near which village my horse had a little bait of fresh mown hay, the first and last he eat in that kingdom. And when I tell you that this faithful, and (for a great part of my journey) only servant I had, never made a faux pas, never was so tired but that, upon a pinch, he could have gone a league or two farther; nor ever was ill, lame, physicked, or bled, since he was mine; you will agree, that either he is an uncommon good horse, or that his master is a good groom. Indeed I will say, that however fatigued, wet, hungry, or droughty I was, I never partook of any refreshment till my horse had every comfort the inn could afford. I carried a wooden bowl to give him water, and never passed a brook without asking him to drink.—And, as he has been my faithful servant, I am now his; for he lives under the same roof with me, and does nothing but eat, drink, and sleep.—As he never sees me, nor hears my voice, without taking some affectionate notice of me, I ventured to ask him tenderly, whether he thought he should be able to draw two of the same party next year to Rome? No tongue could more plainly express his willingness! he answered me, in French indeed, we-we-we-we-we, said he; so perhaps he might not be sincere, though he never yet deceived me. If, however, he should not go, or should out-live me, which is very probable, my dying request to you will be, to procure him a peaceful walk for the remainder of his days, within the park-walls of some humane private gentleman: though I flatter myself the following petition will save you that trouble, and me the concern of leaving him without that comfort which his faithful services merit.

To SIR JAMES TYLNEY LONG, Bart.

A Faithful Servant's humble Petition,

SHEWETH,

THAT your petitioner entered into the service of his present master at an advanced age, and at a time too that he laboured under a pulmonic disorder, deemed incurable; yet by gentle exercise, wholesome food, and kind usage, he has been enabled to accompany his master from Calais to Artois, Cambray, Rbeims, St. Dizier, Dijon, Challons, Maçon, Lyons, Pont St. Esprit, Pont du Guard, Nismes, Montpellier, Cette, Narbonne, Perpignan, the Pyrenees, Barcelona, Montserrat, Arles, Marseillies, Toulouse, Avignon, Aix, Valence, Paris, and back to Calais, in the course of one year: and that your petitioner has acquitted himself so much to his master's satisfaction, that he has promised to take him next year to Rome; and upon his return, to get him a sine-cure place for the remainder of his days; and, as your petitioner can produce a certificate of his honesty, sobriety, steadiness, and obedience to his master; and wishes to throw himself under the protection of a man of fortune, honour, and humanity, he is encouraged by his said master to make this his humble prayer to you, who says, that to above three hundred letters he has lately written, to ask a small boon for himself, he did not receive above three answers that gave him the pleasure your's did, though he had twenty times better pretensions to an hundred and fifty. And as your petitioner has seen a great deal of the world, as well as his master, and has always observed, that such men who are kind to their fellow-creatures, are kind also to brutes; permit an humble brute to throw himself at your feet, and to ask upon his return from Rome, a lean-to shed, under under your park-wall, that he may end his days in his native country, and afford a repas, at his death, to the dogs of a man who feeds the poor, clothes the naked, and who knows how to make use of the noblest privilege which a large fortune can bestow—that of softening the calamities of mankind, and making glad the hearts of those who are oppressed with misfortunes.—Your petitioner, therefore, who has never been upon his knees before to any man living, humbly prays, that he may be admitted within your park-pale, and that he may partake of that bounty which you bestow in common to your own servants, who, by age or misfortunes are past their labour; in which request your petitioner's master impowers him to use his name and joint prayer with CALLE'E.

I do hereby certify, that nothing is advanced in the above petition but what is strictly true ; and that if the petitioner had been able to express himself properly, his merits and good qualities would have appeared to much greater advantage, as well as his services ; as he has omitted many towns he attended his master to, besides a variety of smaller journies ; that he is cautious, wary, spirited, diligent, faithful, and honest ; that he is not nice, but eats, with appetite and good temper, whatever is set before him ; and that he is in all respects worthy of that asylum he asks, and which his master laments more on his account than his own, that he cannot give him.

PHILIP THICKNESSE.

Calais, the 4th of Nov.
1776.

LETTER

L E T T E R LVI.

CALAIS.

O N our way here we spent two or three days at Chantilly, one of fifty Chateaux belonging to the PRINCE of CONDE: for though we had visited this delightful place, two or three times, some years ago; yet, beside its natural beauties, there is always something new. One spot we found particularly pleasing, nay flattering to an Englishman; it is called l'Isle d'Amour, in which there are some thatched cottages, a water-mill, a garden, shrubbery, &c. in the English taste, and the whole is, in every respect, well executed. The dairy is neat, and the milkmaid not ugly, who has her little villa, as well as the miller. There is also a tea-house, a billiard room, an eating-room, and some other little buildings, all externally in the English village style, which give the lawn, and serpentine walks that surround them, a very pastoral appearance. The eating-room is particularly well fancied, being coved within, and so painted as to produce a good idea of a close arbor; the several windows which are pierced through the sides, have such forms as the fantastic turn of the bodies of the painted trees admit of; and the building is in a manner surrounded with natural trees; the room, when illuminated for the prince's supper, has not only a very pleasing effect, but is a well executed deception, for the real trees falling into perspective with those which are painted, through the variety of odd-shaped windows, has a very natural, and consequently a very pleasing effect; but what adds greatly to the deception is, that at each corner of the room the floor is opened, and clumps of earth thrown up, which bear, in full perfection, a great variety of flowers

flowers and flowering shrubs. We had the honour to be admitted while the prince of Condé, the duke and duchess of Bourbon, the princess of Monaco, and two or three other ladies and gentlemen, were at supper : a circumstance which became rather painful to us, as it seemed to occasion some to the company, and particularly to the prince, who enquired who we were, and took pains to shew every sort of politeness he could to strangers he knew nothing of. The supper was elegantly served on plate ; but there seemed to me too many servants round the table. The conversation was very little, and very reserved. I do not recollect that I saw scarce a smile during the whole time of supper.

The prince is a sprightly, agreeable man, something in person like Lord Barrington ; and the duke of Bourbon so like his

his father, that it was difficult to know the son from the father.

The duchess of Bourbon is young, handsome, and a most accomplished lady.

During the supper, a good band of music played; but it was all wind instruments. Mr. Lejune, the first bassoon, is a most capital performer indeed.

After the dessert had been served up about ten minutes, the princess of Monaco rose from the table, as did all the company, and suddenly turning from it, each lady and gentleman's servant held them a water glass, which they used with great delicacy, and then retired.

The princess of Monaco is separated from the prince her husband; yet she has beauty enough for any prince in Europe,
and

and brought fortune enough for two or three.

The duchefs of Bourbon had rather a low head-drefs, and without any feather, or, that I could perceive, rouge; the princefs of Monaco's head-drefs was equally plain; the two other ladies, whofe rank I do not recollect, wore black caps, and hats high drefsed. There were eight perfons fat down to table, and I think about twenty-five fervants, in and out of livery, attended.

The next day we were admitted to fee the prince's cabinet of natural and artificial curiofities; and, as I intimated my defign of publifhing fome account of my journey, the prince was pleafed to allow me as much time as I chofe, to examine his very large and valuable collection; among which is a cafe of gold medallions (72) of the kings of France, in fucceffion, sion, a great variety of birds and beasts, ores, minerals, petrifications, gems, cameos, &c. There is also a curious cabinet lately presented to the prince by the king of Denmark; and near it stood a most striking representation in wax of a present said to be served up to a late unfortunate queen: it is the head and right-hand of Count Struensee, as they were taken off after the execution. The head and hand lie upon a silver dish, with the blood and blood-vessels too, well executed. Never surely was any thing so sadly, yet so finely done. I defy the nicest eye, however near, to distinguish it (suppose the head laid upon a pillow in a bed) from nature; nor must Mrs. Wright, or any of the workers in wax I have ever yet seen, pretend to a tythe of the perfection in that art, with the man who made this head.—Sad as the subject is, I could not withstand the temptation of asking permission to take a copy of it; and, fortunately, I found the man who

who made it was then at Paris—nor has he executed his work for me less perfect than that he made for the prince.—I have been thus particular in mentioning this piece of art, because, of the kind, I will venture to say, it is not only finely executed, but one of the most perfect deceptions ever seen.

When you, or any of the ladies and gentlemen who have honoured this poor performance of mine with their names, or their family or friends, pass this way, I shall be happy to embrace that occasion, to shew that I have not said more of this inimitable piece of art than it merits; nor do I speak thus positively from my own judgment, but have the concurrent opinion of many men of unquestionable judgment, that it is a master-piece of art, and among the rest, our worthy and valuable friend Mr. Sharp, of the Old Jewry.

Before

Before we left Chantilly, we had a little concert, to which my train added one performer; and as it was the only string instrument, it was no small addition.

The day we left this charming place, we found the prince and all his company under tents and pavilions on the road-side, from whence they were preparing to follow the hounds.

At Amiens, there is in the Hôtel de Ville, a little antique god, in bronze, which was found, about four years ago, near a Roman urn, in the earth, which is very well worthy of the notice of a connoisseur; but it is such as cannot decently be described. The person in whose custody it is, permitted me to take an impression from it in wax; but I am not quite so good a hand at wax-work as the artist mentioned above, and yet my little household-god has some merit, a merit too that was not discovered till three months months after it had been fixed in the Hôtel de Ville; and the discovery was made by a female, not a male, connoisseur.

It is said, that a Hottentot cannot be so civilized, but that he has always a hankering after his savage friends, and dried chitterlins; and that gypsies prefer their roving life to any other, a circumstance which once did, but now no longer surprizes me; for I feel such a desire to wander again, that I am impatient till the winter is past, when I intend to visit Geneva, and make the tour of Italy; and if you can find me out a sensible valetudinarian or two, of either sex, or any age, who will travel as we do, to see what is to be seen, to make a little stay where the place or the people invite us to do so; who can dine on a cold partridge in a hot day under a shady tree; and travel in a landau and one, we will keep them a table d'hôte, that shall be more pleasant than expensive, and which will produce

produce more health and spirits than half the drugs of Apothecaries'-Hall.

If God delights so much in variety, as all things animate and inanimate sufficiently prove, no wonder that man should do so too: and I have now been so accustomed to move, though slowly, that I intend to creep on to my journey's end, by which means I may live to have been an inhabitant of every town almost in Europe, and die, as I have lately (and wish I had always) lived, a free citizen of the whole world, slave to no sect, nor subject to any king. Yet, I would not be considered as one wishing to promote that disposition in others; for I must confess, that it is in England alone, where an innocent and virtuous man can sit down and enjoy the blessings of liberty and his own cheerful hearth, in full confidence that no earthly power can disturb it; and the best reason which can be offered in favour of Englishmen lishmen visiting other kingdoms, is, to enable them, upon their return, to know how to enjoy the inestimable blessings of their country. Perhaps the true character of England is well comprised in the four following lines, I am sure I can HONESTLY subscribe to the truth of the two last.

- “ To lend or to spend, or to give in,
- “ This is the best world, that we can live in;
- “ But to beg, to borrow, or get a man's own :
- “ It is the worst world that ever was known !

L E T T E R LVII.

FOR what should I cross the streight which divides us though it were but half seven leagues? we should only meet to part again, and purchase pleasure, as most pleasures are purchased, too dearly; I have dropt some heavy tears, (ideally at least) over poor BUCKLE's * grave, and it is all one to a man, now with God! on what king's foil such a tribute as that is paid: had some men of all nations known the goodness of his heart as we did, some men of all nations would grieve as we do. When I frequented Morgan's †, I used him as a touch-stone, to try the hearts of other men upon; for, as he was not rich, he was out of the walk of knaves and flatterers, and such men who were not prejudiced in his favour at first sight, and coveted not his company after a little acquaintance, I always avoided as beings made of base metal. It was for this reason I despised that  *, (you know who I mean) for you too have seen him snarl and bite, and play the dog, even to BUCKLE!

* WILLIAM BUCKLE, Esq.

† MORGAN'S Coffee-House, Grove, BATH.

Our Sunday night's tea-club round his cheerful hearth is now for ever dissolved, and SHARPE and RYE have administered their last friendly offices with a potion of sorrow.

Were I the hermit of St. Catherine, I would chisel his name as deeply into one of my pine-heads, as his virtues are impressed on my memory. Though I have lost his guinea, I will not lose his name; he looked down with pity upon me when here; who can say he may not do so still?

I should be an infidel, did not a few such men as he keep me back.

And now, my dear Sir, after the many trifling subjects in this very long correspondence with you, I will avail myself of this good one, to close it, on the noblest work of GOD, AN HONEST MAN. The loss of such a friend is sufficient to induce one to lay aside all pursuits but that, of following his example, and preparing to follow him.

If you should ever follow me here, I flatter myself you will find that I have, to the best of my poor abilities, made such a sketch of men and things on this side of the water, that you will be able to discover some likenesses to the originals. A bad painter often hits the general features, though he fall ever so short of the graces of Titian, or the Morbidezza of Guido. I am sure, therefore, you and every man of candour, candour, will make allowances for the many inaccuracies, defects, &c. which I am sensible these letters abound with though I am incapable of correcting them. My journey, you know, was not made, as most journeys are, to indulge in luxury, or in pursuit of pleasures, but to soften sorrow, and to recover from a blow, which came from a mighty hand indeed! but a HAND, still MORE MIGHTY, has enabled me to resist it, and to return in health, spirits, and with that peace of mind which no earthly power can despoil me of, and with that friendship and regard for you, which will only cease, when I cease to be

PHILIP THICKNESSE.

Calais, Nov. 4.

1776.

P. S. I found Berwick's regiment on duty in this town: it is commanded by Mons. le Duc de Fitz James, and a number of Irish gentlemen, my countrymen, (for so I will call them.) You may easily imagine, that men who possess the natural hospitality of their own country, with the politeness and good-breeding of this, must be very agreeable acquaintance in general: But I am bound to go farther, and to say, that they are endeared to me by marks of true friendship. Neither the king of France, nor any prince in Europe, can boast of troops better disciplined; nor is the king insensible of their merit, for I have lately seen a letter written by the king's command from le Comte de St. Germain, addressed to the officers of one of these corps, whereby it appears, that the king is truly sensible of their distinguished merit; for braver men there are not in any service:—What an acquisition to France! what a loss to Britain!

AS the Marquis of Grimaldi is retired from his public character, I am tempted to send you a specimen of his private one, which flattering as it is to me, and honourable to himself, I should have with-held, had his excellency continued first minister of Spain; by which you will see, that while Messrs. Curtoys, Wombwell, Adams, &c. united to set me in a suspicious light (though they thought otherwise), the minister's politeness and humanity made them tremble at the duplicity of their conduct; and had I been disposed to have acted the same sinister part they did, some of them might have been reminded of an old Spanish proverb,

“ A las màlas léguas tigras.”

“ Bad tongues may meet with scissars.”

“ MUY S^R. MIO,

“ POR la carta de 1^o del corr^{te}. veo
 “ su feliz llegada a essa ciudad, en donde
 “ habia tomado una casa, y por las cartas “ que me incluye, y debuelo reconosco los “ terminos honrados y recomendables con

“ que ha efectuado su salida de Inglaterra, “ cosa que yo nunca podría dudar.

“ Deseo que à V. S. le váya muy bien en “ este Reyno, y espero que me avisará el “ tiempo que se propusiere detener en Bar“ celona, y tambien quando se verificará
“ su yda a Valencia: cuyo Pais se ha
“ creydo el mas pròpio para su residencia “ estable, por la suavidad del clima y de-“ mas circunstancias.—V. S. me hallará “ pronto a complacerle y servirle en lo “ que se le ofrezca: que es querido en el “ dia puédo decirle, refiriendome ademas
“ a mis cartas precedentes comunicadas “ por medio de - - - - -
“ - - - - -
“ - - - - - Dios quiere a V. S. M^o c^o “ d^o Sr el 14 Nov^{re}. de 1775.

“ B L. M. en. S.

“ Su mayor ser^{or}.

“ El Marq' de GRIMALDI.

“ A Don Felipe Thickness.”

A Madame

A Madame THICKNESSE.

VOilà Madame, quelques amusemens de ma plume. Vous avez paru les désirer, mon empressement à vous obéir fera le mérite de ces légères productions ; la première a eu assez de succès en France, je doute qu'elle puisse en avoir un pareil en Angleterre, parce que le mot n'a peut-être pas la même signification ; ce que nous appellons Grelot est une petite clochette fermée que l'on attache aux hochets des enfans pour les amuser ; dans le sens métaphysique on en fait un des attributs de la folie : ici je l'employe comme emblème de gaieté et d'enfance. Le Printems est une Epitre écrite de la campagne à un de mes amis ; j'étois sous le charme de la création, pour ainsi dire ;

les

les vers en font d'une mesure très difficile.

La description de Courcelles est celle d'une terre qu'avoit ma mere, et où j'ai passé toute ma jeunesse ; enchantée de son paysage, et de la vie champêtre que j'aime de passion, je l'adreffois à un honnête homme de Rheims que j'appellois par plaisanterie mon Papa : ce que j'ai de meilleur dans mon porté-feuille, ce sont des chansons pour mon mari ; comme je l'aime parfaitement, mon cœur m'a servi de muse : mais cette tendresse toujours si delicieuse aux interessés ne peut plaire à ceux qui ne le sont pas. Quand j'aurai l'honneur de vous revoir, Madame, je vous communiquerai mon recueil, et vous jugerez. Recevez les hommages respectueux de mon mari, et daignez faire agréer nos vœux à Monf. Tiennerse. Je n'ai point encore reçu les jolies poches ; je pars demain pour la campagne, campagne, et j'y resterai quinze jours ; nous avons des chaleurs cruelles, Messrs. les Anglois qui sont ici en souffrent beaucoup ; j'ai l'honneur d'être avec le plus inviolable attachement,

Madame,

Votre très humble

Et très obéissant servante,

De Courcelles Desjardins.

28 Juillet, 1776.

Epitre

Épître au Grelot.

DE la folie aimable lot,
 Don plus brillant que la richesse,
 Et que je nommerai sagesse,
 Si je ne craignois le fagot.
 C'est toi que je chante ô Grelot,
 Hochet heureux de tous les ages !
 L'homme est à toi dès le maillot,
 Mais dans tes nombreux appanages
 Jamais tu ne comptas le fot :
 De tes fons mitigés le sage En tapinois se rejouit, Tandis que l'insensé jouit,
 Du plaisir de faire tapage.
 Plus envié, qui dédaigné,
 Par cette espee atrabilaire
 Qui pense, qu'un air refrogné
 La met au dessus du vulgaire ;

La privation de tes bienfaits
 Seule fait naître sa satyre ;
 Charmante idole du François,
 Chez lui réside ton empire :
 Tes détracteurs sont les pedans,
 Les avars et les amans
 De cette gloire destructive Qui peuple l'infernal rive,
 Et remplit l'univers d'excès.
 L'ambitieux dans sons délire
 N'éprouve que de noirs accès.
 Le genre-humain feroit en paix,
 Si les conquérans favoient rire.
 Contre ce principe évident
 C'est en vain qu'un censeur déclame,
 Le mal ne se fait en riant.
 Si de toi provient l'épigramme,
 Son tour heureux n'est que plaisant,
 Et ne nuit jamais qu'au méchant,
 Que sa conscience décèle.
 Nomme t-on la rose cruelle,
 Lorsqu'un mal-adroit la cueillant
 Se blesse lui-même au tranchant

De l'épine qu' avec prudence
 Nature fit pour sa défense ?
 Tes simples et faciles jeux
 Prolongent dit-on notre enfance, Censeur, que te faut-il de mieux !
 Des abus le plus dangereux,
 Le plus voisin de la démence,
 Est de donner trop d'importance
 A ces chimères, dont les cieux
 Ont composé notre existence.
 Notre devoir est d'être heureux
 A moins de frais, à moins de vœux,
 De l'homme est toute la science.
 Par tes sons, toujours enchanteurs,
 Tu fais fuir la froide vieillesse ;
 Ou plutôt la couvrant de fleurs,
 Tu lui rends l'air de la jeunesse.
 Du temps tu trompes la lenteur,
 Par toi chaque heure est une fête,
Démotrite fut ton Docteur, Anacréon fut ton Prophète ;
 Tous deux pour sages reconnus :
 L'un riant des humains abus,

Te fit sonner dans sa retraite ;
L'autre chantant à la guingette,
Te donna pour pomme à Venus.
Après eux ma simple mufette
T'offre ses accens ingénus.
Charmant Grelot, sur ta clochette
Je veux moduler tous mes vers ;
Sois toujours la douce amufette,
Source de mes plaisirs divers :
Heureux qui te garde en cachette,
Et se passe l'univers.

Le Printems.

Épître à Monf. D—.

DEja dans la plaine
On reffent l'haleine Du léger Zephir ;
Déja la nature
Sourit au plaifir,
La jeune verdure,
A l'eclat du jour,
Oppofe la teinte
Que chérit l'amour.
Fuyant la contrainte,
Au pied des ormeaux,
Ma mufe naïve
Reprend fes pipeaux ;
Sur la verte rive,
Aux tendres echos,
Elle dit ces mots.

Volupté fure
Bien fans pareil !
O doux réveil

De la nature !
Que l'ame pure
Dans nos guérets,
Avec yvresse,
Voit tes attraits ;
De la tendresse,
Et de la paix,
Les doux bienfaits,
Sur toute espèce
Vont s'épandant,
Et font l'aimant,
Dont la magie
Enchaîne et lie
Tout l'univers.
L'homme pervers,
Dans sa malice,
Ferme son cœur
A ces delices,
Et de l'erreur
Des goûts factices
Fait son bonheur.

La noire envie,
Fille d'orgueil,
Chaque furie
Jusqu'au cercueil, Tisse sa vie.
Le vains désirs,
Des vrais plaisirs
Sont antipodes ;
A ces pagodes
Culte se rend,
L'oeil s'y méprend,
Et perd de vuë Felicité ;
La Dêité
La plus couruë,
La moins connuë.
Simple réduit,
Et folitaire,
Jadis construit
Par le mystère,
Est aujourd'hui
Sa résidence :
La bienveillance,

Au front ferein
De la déesse
Est la Prêtresse ;
Les ris badins
Sont sacristains.
Joyeux fidelles,
De fleurs nouvelles Offrent les dons ;
Tendres chançons,
Tribut du Zele,
Jointes au fons
De Philoméle,
De son autel
Sont le rituel ;
Dans son empire
Telle est la loi,
“ Aimer et rire
“ De bonne foy.”
Cet Evangile,
Peu difficile,
Du vrai bonheur Seroit auteur,

Si pour apôtre
Il vous avoit ;
En vain tout autre
Le prêcheroit.
La colonie
Du double mont
Du vraie génie
Vous a fait don,
Sans nul caprice
Entrez en lice,
Et de Passif
Venant actif
Pour la Déesse Enchanteresse,
Qui dans ces lieux
Nous rend heureux.
Donnez moi rose Nouvelle éclosé :
Du doux Printems
Hâtez le tems,
Il etincelle
En vos écrits,
Qu'il renouvelle
Mes Esprits.

Adieu beau Sire,
Pour ce délire Le sentiment
Est mon excuse.
S'il vous amuse
Un seul moment,
Et vous rappelle
Un cœur fidelle
Depuis cent ans,
Comme le vôtre
En tous les tems
N'ai désir autre.

F A B L E.

Les Aquilons et l'Oranger.

DE fougeux Aquilons une troupe emportée, Contre un noble Oranger exhaloit ses fu-reurs,
Ils soufflerent en vain, leur rage mutinée
De l'arbre aux fruits dorés n'ôta que quelques fleurs.

M A D R I G A L.

Du tumulte, du bruit, des vaines passions
Fuyons l'eclat trompeur : à leurs impressions
Préférons les douceurs de ce séjour paisible, Disoit un jour Ariste à la tendre Délos.
Soit, repart celle-ci ; mais las ! ce doux repos
N'est que le pis-aller d'une ame trop sensible.

Q U A T R A I N.

Telle que ce ruisseau qui promene son onde
Dans des lieux écartés loin du bruit et du monde,
Je veux pour peu d'amis exister désormais,
C'est loin des faux plaisirs que l'on trouve les vrais.

REVERIE

REVERIE SUR UNE LECTURE.

Aux froids climats de l'ourse, et dans ceux du midi,

L'homme toujours le même est vain, foible, et crédule,

Sa devise est partout Sottise et Ridicule.

Le célèbre Chinois, le François étourdi,

De la raison encor n'ont que le crepuscule,

Jadis au seul hazard donnant tout jugement,

Par les effets cuifans du fer rougi qui brule

On croyoit discerner le foible et l'innocent ;

A Siam aujourd'hui pareille erreur circule,

Et l'on voit même esprit sous une autre formule.

Quand quelque fait obscur tient le juge en
suspens,

On fait aux yeux de tous à chaque contendant

D'Esculape avaler purgative pillule,

Celui dont l'estomac répugné à pareil mets

Est réputé coupable et paye tous les frais.

Du pauvre genre-humain telles sont les annales ;

Rome porta le deuil de l'honneur des vestales,

Du Saint Pere à présent, elle baïse l'ergot :

Plus gais, non plus sensés dans ce siècle falot,

Nous choififfons au moins l'erreur la plus jolie :
 De l'inquifition, le bal, la comédie
 Remplacent parmi nous le terrible fagot ;
 Notre légéreté détruit la barbarie
 Mais nous n'avons encor que changé de folie.

ENVOI A MON MARI.

Tandis, mon cher, que tes travaux
 Me procurent ce doux repos,
 Et cette heureufe infouciance,
 But incertain de l'opulence ;
 Mon ame l'abeille imitant,
 Aux pays d'esprit élancée
 Cueille les fleurs de penfée,
 Et les remet aux fentiment.
 Mais hélas ! dans ce vaste champ
 En vain je cherche la fageffe,
 Près de moi certain Dieu fripon
 Me fait quitter l'école de Zenon,
 Pour le charme de la tendrefse ;
 “ L'homme eft crée pour être bon “ Et non favant, dit il, qu'il aime,
 “ Du bonheur c'est le vrai fyftême :
 Je fens, ma foi, qu'il a raifon.

DESCRIPTION

DESCRIPTION

De la terre dans laquelle j'habitois, adressée à un homme très respectable que j'appellois mon Papa.

QUE vous êtes aimable mon cher Papa de me demander une description de ma solitude. Votre imagination est gênée de ne pouvoir se la peindre. Vous voulez faire de Courcelles une seconde étoile du matin, et y lier avec moi un de ces commerces d'ames réservés aux favoris de Brama. Votre idée ne me perdra plus de vue, j'en ferai mon génie tutélaire, je croirai à chaque instant sentir sa présence, ah ! elle ne peut trop tôt arriver, montrons lui donc le chemin.

Quittant votre cité Rhémoise,
Ville si fertile en bons Vins,
En gras moutons, en bons humains,
Après huit fois trois mille toises
Toujours suivant le grand chemin,
On découvre enfin le village
Où se trouve notre hermitage. Là

Là rien aux yeux du voyageur
 Ne presente objet de surprife,
 Petit ruiſſeau, des maifons, une Eglife
 Tout à côté la hutte du Pafteur ;
 Car ces Meſſieurs pour quelques Patenôtres
 Pour un furplis, pour un vêtement noir,
 En ce monde un peu plus qu'en l'autre
 Ont droit près du bon dieu d'établir leu manoir.

Ce début n'eſt pas fort ſeduiſant ; auffi ne vous ai-je rien promis de merveilleux. Je pourrois cependant pour embellir ma narration me perdre dans de brillantes deſcriptions, et commencer par celle de notre clocher ; mais malheureuſement nous n'en avons point ; car je ne crois pas que l'on puiſſe appeller de ce nom l'endroit preſque ſouterrain où longent trois mauvaiſes cloches. Elles m'étourdiſſent par fois au point que ſans leur baptême, je les enverrois aux enfers ſonner les diners de Pluton et de Proſerpine.

On

On apperçoit près de l'Eglise, entre elle et le curé, une petite fenêtre grillée, ceci est une vraie curiosité; c'est un sépulcre bâti par Saladin d'Anglure, ancien Seigneur de Courcelles, il vivoit du tems des croisades, et donna comme les autres dans la manie du siècle. Il ne fut pas plus heureux que ses confreres. Son fort fut d'être prisonnier du vaillant Saladin dont il conserva le furnom. Sa captivité l'ennuyant, il fit vœu, si elle finissoit bientôt, de bâtir dans sa Seigneurie un sépulcre, et un calvaire à même distance l'un de l'autre qu'ils le font à Jérusalem. C'est aussi ce qu'il fit.

Quand par une aventure heureuse,
 Des fers du vaillant Saladin
 Il revint chez lui sauf et sain ;
 Mais la chronique scandaleuse
 Qui daube toujours leprochain,
 Et ne se repâit que de blâme
 Pretend que trop tôt pour Madame,
 Et trop tard pour le Pelerin,
 Dans son Châtel il s'en revint.

Ce

Ce fut, dit on, le lendemain,
La veille, ou le jour que la Dame
Croyant son mari très benin
Parti pour la gloire éternelle, Venoit de contracter une hymenée nouvelle.

La tradition étoit en balance sur ces trois da es ; mais la malignité humaine a donné la préférence à la dernière, enforte qu'il paroit très sur que l'Epoux n'arriva que le lendemain.

Quel affront pour un chef couronné de lauriers !
Tel est pourtant le sort des plus fameux guerriers ;
Ceux d'aujourd'hui n'en font que rire,
Mais ceux du temspaffé mettoient la chose au pis ;
Ils n'avoient pas l'esprit de dire
Nous sommes quitte, et bons amis.

Pendant que vous êtes en train de visiter
nos antiquités Courcelloises, il me prend envie de vous faire entrer dans notre réduit.

Quoique du titre de château
Pompeusement on le décore,
Ne vous figurez pas qu'il soit vaste ni beau.
Tel que ces Grands que l'on honore

Pour

Pour les vertus de leurs ayeux
Pour tout mérite il n'a comme eux
Qu'un nom qui se conserve encore.

Ainsi pour vous en former une juste idée, ne cherchez votre modèle ni dans les Romans, ni dans les miracles de féerie.
Ce n'est pas même un vieux château fort,
comme il en existe encore quelques uns
dans nos entours.

Point on n'y voit fossé ni bastion,
Ni demi-lune, ni Dongeon,
Ni beaux dehors de structure nouvelle,
Mais bien une antique Tourelle
Flanquant d'assez vieux bâtimens,
Dont elle est l'unique ornement.

Un Poëte de nos cantons a dit assez plaisam-ment en parlant de ceci.

Sur les bords de la Vesse un château charmant
(N'allez pas chicaner, Lecteur impertinent)
Le bâtiment à part, la Dame qui l'habite
Par ses rares vertus en fait tout le mérite.
Vous verrez tout-à l'heure s'il avoit raison.

Je

Je ne m'arrêterai point à vous peindre la ferme quoiqu'elle tienne au château, ni l'attirail des animaux de toute espèce qu'elle renferme.

Ces spectacles vraiment rustiques
Offrent pourtant plus de plaisirs
A des regards philosophiques,
Que ce que l'art et les desirs
De notre infatiable espèce

Inventent tous les jours aidés par la mollesse.

Je vous ferai entrer tout de suite dans une grande cour de gazon où effectivement je voudrois bien vous voir. Deux manières de Perrons y conduisent, l'un aux appar-temens, l'autre à la cuisine. Commençons par ce dernier quoique ce ne soit pas trop la coutume.

Là chaque jour, tant bien que mal,
On apprête deux fois un repas très frugal,
Mais que l'appétit affaïsonne.
Loin, bien loin, ces bruyans festins
Toujours suivis des médecins
Où le poison dans cent ragoûts foïsonne.

Nous

Nous aimons mieux peu de mets bien choisis
De la Santé, moins de plats, plus de ris.

Voilà notre devise, mon cher Papa, je crois qu'elle est aussi la vôtre; notre réz de chauffée consiste en cuisine, office, salle à manger, chambre et cabinets, rien de tout cela n'est ni élégant ni commode.

Nos devanciers, fort bonnes gens,
N'entendoient rien aux ornemens;
Et leurs désirs ne passoient guère
Les bornes du seul nécessaire.

Ils étoient plus heureux et plus sages que nous, car la vraie sagesse n'est autre chose que la modération des desirs. D'après cette définition on pourroit, je crois, loger tout notre siècle aux petites maisons.
Ce qu'il y a de plus agréable dans la notre est la vuë du grand chemin.

De ce chemin où chacun trotte,
Où nous voyons, soirs et matins,
Passer tout espece d'humains;
Tantôt la gent portant calote,

Et

Et tantôt de jeunes plumets,
Les rusés disciples d'Ignace,
Puis ceux de la grace efficace,
Des piétons, des cabriolets,
Tant d'Êtres à deux pieds, fots et colifichets,
Enfin cent fortes d'équipages,
Et mille fortes de visages.

Ce tableau mouvant est par fois fortréc réatif ; il me paroît assez plaisant d'y juger les gens sur la mine, et de deviner leur motif, et le sujet de leurs courses.

Mais, Papa, qui'l est consolant,
Voyant leurs soins et leur inquiétude,
De jouir du repos constant,
Qu'on goute dans la solitude.

A dire vrai, le spectacle du grand chemin, est celui qui m'occupe le moins ; j'aime mille fois mieux nos promenades champêtres ; avant de vous y conduire, il faut en historien fidelle vous rendre compte de notre chaumiére.

Vous croyez peut-être trouver un premier étage au deffus de la façade dont je vous

vous ai parlé? Point du tout. Ne vous ai-je pas dit que nos pères préféreroient l'utile à l'agréable: aussi ont ils mieux aimé construire de grands greniers, que de jolis appartemens; mais en revanche, ils ont jetté quantité de petites mansardes sur un autre côté du logis. Ce dernier donne sur un verger qui fait mes délices; il est précédé d'un petit parterre, et finit par un bois charmant.

Une onde toujours claire et pure
 Y vient accorder son murmure
 Au son mélodieux de mille et mille oiseaux,
 Que cachent en tous tems nos jeunes arbrisseaux.
 C'est là que votre fille se plait à rêver à vous, mon cher Papa; c'est dans ce réduit agréable qu'elles occupe tour à tour de morale et de tendresse.

Epiclete, Pope, Zenon,

Et Socrate, et surtout l'ingénieur Platon,

Viennent dans ces lieux solitaires,

Me prêter le secours de leurs doctes lumières:

Mais plus souvent la sœur de l'enfant de Cypris, Ecartant sans respect cette foule de sages,

Occupe seule mes esprits,
En y gravant de mes amis
Les trop séduisantes images.

Je n'entreprendrois pas de vous peindre nos autres promenades, elles sont toutes charmantes ; un paysage coupé, quantité de petits bosquets, mille jolis chemins, nous procurent naturellement des beautés auxquelles l'art ne sauroit atteindre.

La Velle borde nos prairies,
Sur sa rive toujours fleurie
Regne un doux air de bergerie,
Dangereux pour les tendres cœurs.
Là, qui se sent l'ame attendre,
S'il craint de l'amour les erreurs,
Doit vite quitter la partie.

Quittons la donc, mon cher Papa ; aussi bien ai-je seulement oublié de vous montrer la plus belle pièce de l'hermitage.
C'est un canal superbe. Il a cent vingt toises de long sur douze de large ; une eau courante

courante et cryftalline en rend la furface toujours brillante ; c'est la digne emblème d'une cœur ami, jugez fi cette vuë me fait penfer à vous.

De grands potagers terminent l'enclos de la maifon. Si j'étois méchante je continuerois ma defcription, et ne vous ferois pas grace d'une laitue ; mais je me contenterai de vous dire que le ciel fit fans doute ce canton pour des Etres broutans. Les fruits, et les legumes y font excellens. Si les Ifraëlites en euffent mangé jadis, ils n'auroient ni regretté l'Egypt, ni defiré la terre promife.

Voilà, mon cher Papa, une affez mauvaife efquiffe du pays Courcellois.

L'air m'en feroit plus doux, et le ciel plus ferein,
Si quelque jour moins intraitable,
Et fe laiffant flechir, le farouche Deftin
Y conduifoit ce trio tant amiable Que j'aime, et chérirai fans fin.

Mais hélas ! j'y perds tout mon Latin ;

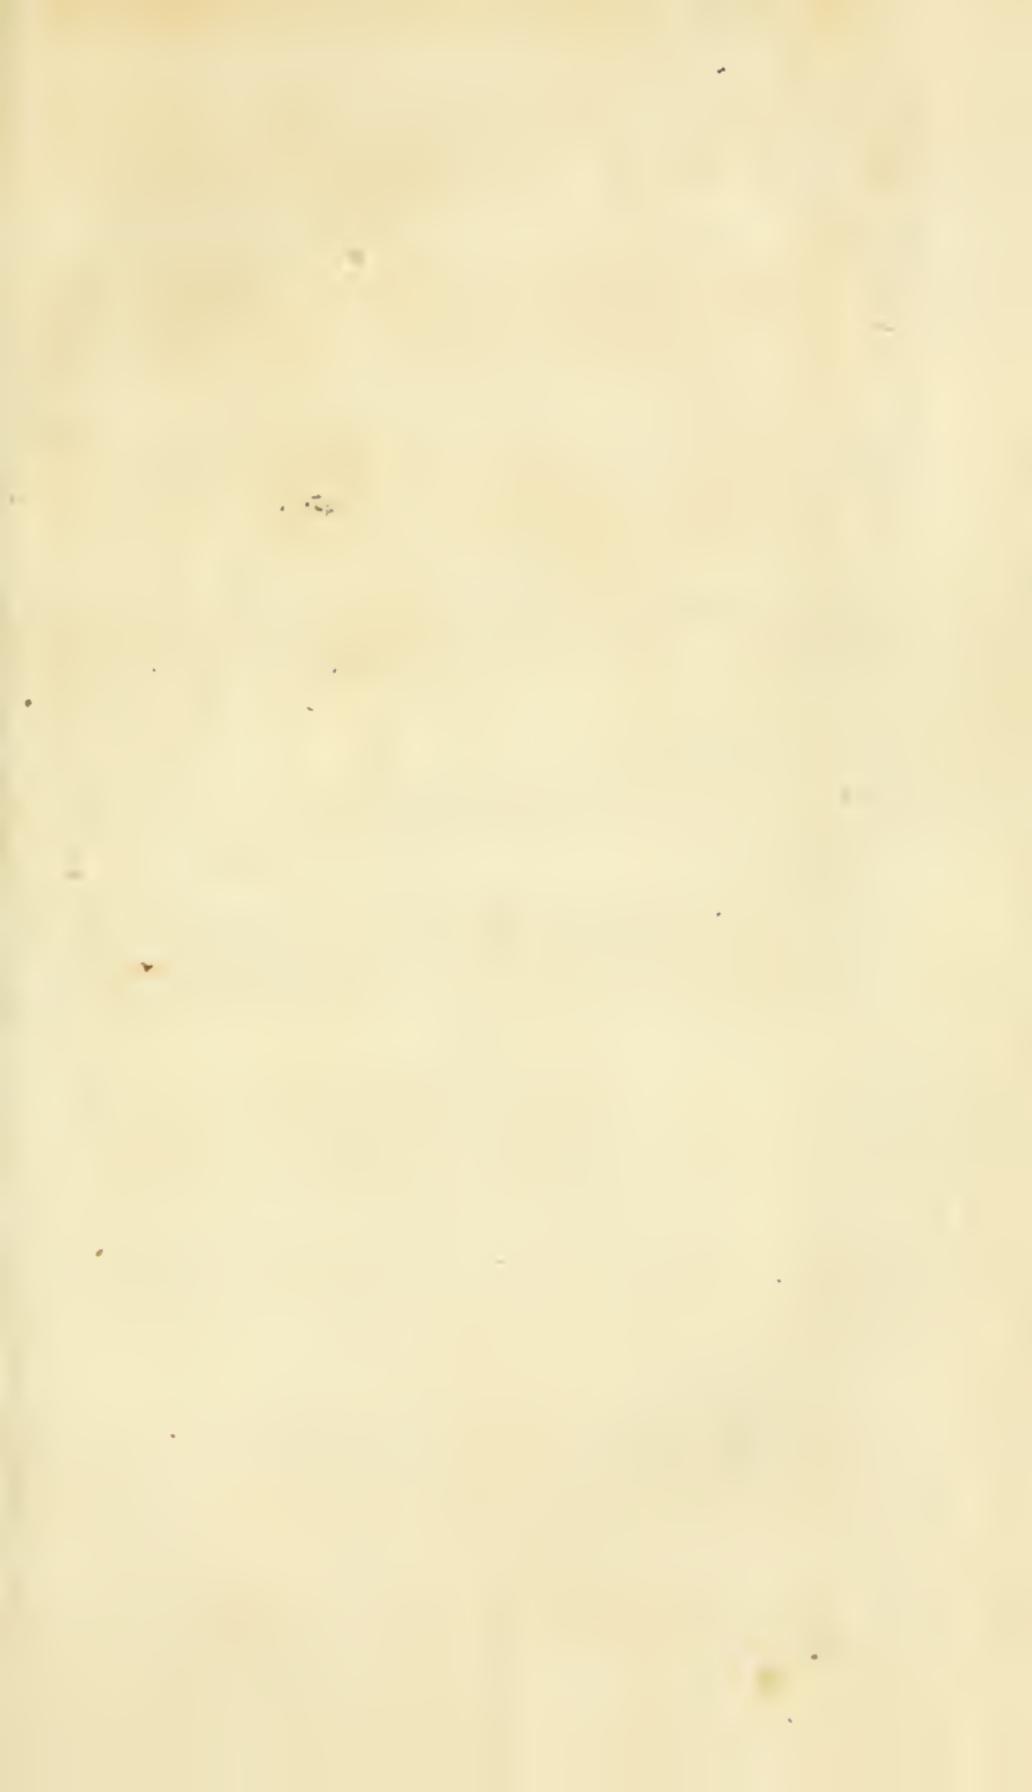

Et ce que de mieux je puis faire,
Est d'espérer, et de me taire.

I Should have stopt here, and finished my present correspondence with you, by leaving your mind harmonized with the above sweet stanzas of Madame des Jardins, but that it may seem strange to give a specimen of one French lady's literary talents, without acknowledging that this kingdom abounds with many of infinite merit.—While England can boast only of about half a dozen women, who will immortalize their names by their works, France can produce half an hundred, admired throughout Europe, for their wit, genius, and elegant compositions.—Were I to recite the names and writings only of female authors of eminence, which France has produced, since the time of the first, and most unfortunate unfortunate unfortunate Héloïse, who died in 1079, down to Madame Riccoboni, now living, it would fill a volume. We have, however, a CARTER and a BARBAUD, not less celebrated for their learning and genius, than for their private virtues; and I think it may, with more truth, be said of women than of men, that the more knowledge, the more virtue; than of men, the more understanding, the less courage. Why then is the plume elevated to the head? and what must the present mode of female education and manners end in, but in more ignorance, dissipation, debauchery, and luxury? and, at length, in national ruin. Thus it was at ROME, the mistress of the world; they became fond of the most vitious men, and such as meant to enslave them, who corrupted their hearts, by humouring and gratifying their follies, and encouraging, on all sides, idleness and dissolute manners, blinded by CÆSAR's complaisance; from his almshouses, they became his bondmen; he charmed them in order to enslave them. When the tragedy of Tereus was acted at ROME, Cicero observed, what plaudits the audience gave with their hands at some severe strokes in it, against tyranny; but he very justly lamented, that they employed their hands, only in the Theatre, not in defending that liberty which they seemed so fond of.

AND now, as BAYES says, “ let’s “ have a Dance.”——

FANDANGO È LOS GIGANZAS.

A handwritten musical score for a piece titled "Fandango è los Giganzas". The score is written on ten staves, organized into five systems of two staves each. The top staff is in treble clef with a key signature of one flat (B-flat) and a common time signature (C). The second staff is in bass clef with the same key signature and time signature. The tempo marking "Pomposo Moderato" is written between the first and second staves. The notation includes various rhythmic values such as eighth and sixteenth notes, rests, and dynamic markings like "hr" (hairpins) and "p" (piano). The piece concludes with a double bar line on the final staff.

Siegue Subit

A handwritten musical score consisting of ten staves. The notation includes various note values (quarter, eighth, and sixteenth notes), rests, and dynamic markings such as mf and f. The music is written in a single system, with some staves containing complex passages and others featuring more rhythmic or melodic lines. The paper shows signs of age, including some staining and fading.

P. f.

Allegretto

GENERAL HINTS
TO STRANGERS WHO TRAVEL IN FRANCE.

G E N E R A L

H I N T S, &c.

I.

IF you travel post, when you approach the town, or bourg where you intend to lie, ask the post-boy, which house he recommends as the best, and never go to that, if there is any other.—Be previously informed what other inns there are in the same place. If you go according to the post-boy's recommendation, the aubergiste gives him two or three livres, which he makes you pay the next morning. I know but one auberge between Marseilles and Paris, where this is not a constant practice, tice, and that is at Vermanton, five leagues from Auxerre, where every English traveller will find a decent landlord, Monsieur la Brunier, à St. Nicolas; good entertainment, and no imposition, and consequently an inn where no post-boy will drive, if he can avoid it.

II.

If you take your own horses, they must be provided with head-pieces, and halters; the French stables never furnish any such things; and your servant must take care that the Garçon d'Ecurie does not buckle them so tight, that the horses cannot take a full bite, this being a common practice, to save hay.

III.

If the Garçon d'Ecurie does not bring the halters properly rolled up, when he puts your horses to, he ought to have nothing given him, because they are so constantly constantly accustomed to do it, that they cannot forget it, but in hopes you may too.

IV.

Direct your servant, not only to see your horses watered, and corn given them, but to stand by while they eat it: this is often necessary in England, and always in France.

V.

If you eat at the table d' Hôte, the price is fixed, and you cannot be imposed upon. If you eat in your own chamber, and order your own dinner or supper, it is as necessary to make a previous bargain with your host for it, as it would be to bargain with an itinerant Jew for a gold watch; the conscience and honour of a French Au-bergiste, and a travelling Jew, are always to be considered alike; and it is very remarkable, that the Publicans in France, are the only people who receive strangers with a cool indifference! and where this indifference

indifference is most shown, there is most reason to be cautious.

VI.

Be careful that your sheets are well aired, otherwise you will find them often, not only damp, but perfectly wet.—Frenchmen in general do not consider wet or damp sheets as dangerous, at least I am sure French Aubergistes do not.

VII.

Young men who travel into France, with a view of gaining the language, should always eat at the table d' Hôte.—There is generally at these tables an officer, or a priest, and though there may be none but people of a middling degree, they will show every kind of attention and preference to a stranger.

VIII.

It is necessary to carry your own pillows with you; in some inns they have them;

them; but in villages, bourgs, &c. none are to be had.

IX.

In the wine provinces, at all the table d'Hôtés, they always provide the common wine, as we do small beer; wine is never paid for separately, unless it is of a quality above the vin du País; and when you call for better, know the price before you drink it.

X.

When fine cambrick handkerchiefs, &c. are given to be washed, take care they are not trimmed round two inches narrower, to make borders to Madame la Blanchisseuse's night caps: this is a little douceur which they think themselves entitled to, from my lord Anglois, who they are sure is très riche, and consequently ought to be plundered by the poor.

XI. Whenever

XI.

Whenever you want honest information, get it from a French officer or a priest, provided they are on the wrong side of forty; but, in general, avoid all intimacy with either on the right side of thirty.

XII.

Where you propose to stay any time, be very cautious with whom you make an acquaintance, as there are always a number of officious forward Frenchmen, and English adventurers, ready to offer you their services, from whom you will find it very difficult to disengage yourself, after you have found more agreeable company.—Frenchmen of real fashion are very circumspect, and will not fall in love with you at first sight; but a designing knave will exercise every species of flattery, in order to fix himself upon you for his dinner, or what else he can get, and will

will be with you before you are up, and after you are in bed.

XIII.

Wherever there is any cabinet of curiosities, medals, pictures, &c. to be seen, never make any scruple to send a card, desiring permission to view them; the request is flattering to a Frenchman, and you will never be refused; and besides this, you will in all probability thereby gain a valuable acquaintance.—It is generally men of sense and philosophy, who make such collections, and you will find the collector of them, perhaps, the most pleasing part of the cabinet.

XIV.

Take it as a maxim, unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians, that whenever you are invited to a supper at Paris, Lyons, or any of the great cities, where a little trifling play commences before supper, GREAT PLAY is intended after after supper; and that you are the marked pigeon to be plucked. Always remember Lord Chesterfield's advice to his son: " If " you play with men, know with whom

 " you play; if with women, for what:"
 and do not think yourself the more secure, because you see at the same table some of your own countrymen, though they are lords or ladies; a London gambler would have no chance in a Parisian party.

XV.

Dress is an essential and most important consideration with every body in France. A Frenchman never appears till his hair is well combed and powdered, however slovenly he may be in other respects.—Not being able to submit every day to this ceremony, the servant to a gentleman of fashion at whose house I visited in Marseilles, having forgot my name, described me to his master, as the gentleman whose hair was toujours mal frisé.—Dress is a foolish foolish thing, says Lord Chesterfield; yet it is a more foolish thing not to be well dressed.

XVI.

You cannot dine, or visit after dinner, in an undress frock, with or without a bag to your hair: the hair en queue, or a little cape to your coat, would be considered an unpardonable liberty. Military men have an advantage above all others in point of dress, in France. A regimental or military coat carries a man with a bonne grace into all companies, with or without a bag to his hair: It is of all others the properest dress for a stranger in France, on many accounts.

XVII.

In France it is not customary to drink to persons at table, nor to drink wine after dinner. When the dessert is taken away, so is the wine;—an excellent custom, and worthy of being observed by all nations.

XVIII.

It is wrong to be led into any kind of conversation but what is absolutely necessary, with the common, or indeed the middling class of people in France. They never fail availing themselves of the least condescension in a stranger, to ask a number of impertinent questions, and to conclude, if you answer them civilly, that they are your equals.—Sentiment and bashfulness are not to be met with but among people of rank in France: to be free and easy is the etiquette of the country; and some kinds of that free and easy manner are highly offensive to strangers, and particularly to a shy Englishman.

XIX.

When well-bred people flatter strangers, they seldom direct their flattery to the object they mean to compliment, but to one of their own country:—As, “ What a bonne
grace

grace the English have," says one to the other, in a whisper loud enough to be heard by the whole company, who all give a nod of consent; yet in their hearts they do not love the English of all other nations*, and therefore conclude, that the English in their hearts do not love them.

XX.

No gentleman, priest, or servant, male or female, ever gives any notice, by knocking, before they enter the bed-chamber, or apartment of ladies or gentlemen.—The post-man opens it to bring your letters; the capuchin, to ask alms; and the gentleman, to make his visit. There is no privacy but by securing your door by a key or a bolt; and when any of the middling class of people have got possession of

* Nor do they mean in general what they say; for I am persuaded they sneer so as to be understood by each other, and really mean mauvaise grace. There is nothing so difficult to learn as to sneer in French; I know many gentlemen perfectly acquainted with every power and use of their language but this.

your apartment, particularly of a stranger; it is very difficult to get them out.

XXI.

There is not on earth, perhaps, so curious and inquisitive a people as the lower class of French: noise seems to be one of their greatest delights. If a ragged boy does but beat a drum, or sound a trumpet, he brings all who hear it about him, with the utmost speed, and most impatient curiosity.—As my monkey rode postillion, in a red jacket laced with silver, I was obliged to make him dismount when I passed through a town of any size: the people gathered so rapidly about me at Moret, three leagues from Fontainebleau, while I stopped only to buy a loaf, that I verily believe every man, woman, and child, except the sick and aged, were paying their respects to my little groom; all infinitely delighted; for none offered the least degree of rudeness. I fear a Frenchman could could not have passed in the same manner, so agreeably, through a country town in England.

XXII.

The French never give coffee, tea, or any refreshment, except upon particular occasions, to their morning or evening visitors.

XXIII.

When the weather is cold, the fire small, and a large company, some young Frenchman shuts the whole circle from receiving any benefit from it, by placing himself just before it, laying his sword genteelly over his left knee, and flattering himself, while all the company wish him at the devil, that the ladies are admiring his legs. When he has gratified his vanity, or is thoroughly warm, he sits down, or goes, and another takes his place. I have seen this abominable ill-breeding kept up by a set of accomplished young fops for two hours together, in exceeding cold weather. This custom has been transplanted lately into England, XXIV.

Jealousy is scarce known in France. By the time the first child is born, an indifference generally takes place: the husband and wife have their separate acquaintance, and pursue their separate amusements, undisturbed by domestic squabbles. When they meet in the evening, it is with perfect good humour, and, in general, perfect good breeding.—When an English wife plays truant, she soon becomes abandoned: it is not so with the French; they preserve appearances and proper decorum, because they are seldom attached to any particular man. While they are at their toilet, they receive the visits of their male acquaintance, and he must be a man of uncommon discernment, who finds out who it is she prefers at that time.—

In

In the fouthern parts of France, the women are in general very free and easy indeed.

XXV.

It is feldom that virgins are feduced in France; the married women are the objects of the men of gallantry. The feduction of a young girl is punished with death; and when they fall, it is generally into the arms of their confeffor—and that is feldom difclofed. Auricular confeffion is big with many mifchiefs *. Where the penitent and the confeffor happen both to be young, he makes her confefs not only all her fins, but finful thoughts, and then, I fear, he knows more than his prudence can abfolve decently; and even when the confeffor is old, the penitent may not be out of danger.

* Confefs your fins one to another, may be right, but to a prieft, as a prieft, and authorifed to appoint penance accordingly, is abfurd.

XXVI.

Never ask a Frenchman his age ; no question whatever can be more offensive to him, nor will he ever give you a direct, though he may a civil answer.—Lewis XV. was always asking every man about him his age. A king may take that liberty, and even then it always gives pain.—Louis XIV. said to the Comte de Grammont, “ Je fais votre âge, l’Evêque de Senlis qui “ a 84 ans, m’a donné pour époque, que “ vous avez étudié ensemble dans la même “ classe.” “ Cet Evêque, Sire, (replied the Comte,) n’accuse pas juste, car ni lui, ni moi n’avons jamais Etudié.”—Before I knew how offensive this question was to a Frenchman, I have had many equivocal answers—such as, O ! mon dieu, as old as the town, or, I thank God, I am in good health, &c.

XXVII.

A modern French author says, that the French language is not capable of the jeux
de

de mots. “ Les jeux de mots are not,” says he, “ in the genius de notre langue qui est grave, et sérieuse.” Perhaps it may be so ; but the language and the men are then so different, that I thought quite otherwise—though the following beautiful specimen of the seriousness of the language ought, in some measure, to justify his remark :
Un seul est frappé, & tous sont délivrés, dieu frappe sons fils innocent, pour l’amour des hommes roupables, & pardonne aux hommes coupables, pour l’amour de son fils innocent.

XXVIII.

All English women, as well as women of other nations, prefer France to their own country ; because in France there is much less restraint on their actions, than there is, (should I not say, than their was?) in England. All Englishmen, however, who have young and beautiful wives, should, if they are not indifferent about their conduct, avoid a trip to Paris, &c. though
it

it be but for “ a six weeks tour :” she must be good and wise too, if six weeks does not corrupt her mind and debauch her morals, and that too by her own sex, which is infinitely the most dangerous company. A French woman is as great an adept at laughing an English woman into all contempt of fidelity to her husband, as married English women are in general, in preparing them during their first pregnancy, for the touch of a man-midwife – and both from the same motive ; i. e. to do as they have done, and bring all the sex upon a level.

XXIX.

The French will not allow their language to be so difficult to speak properly as the English language ; and perhaps they are in the right ; for how often do we meet with Englishmen who speak French perfectly ? How seldom do we hear a Frenchman speak English, without betraying traying his country by his pronounciation? It is not so with the Spaniards: I conversed with two Spaniards who were never twenty miles from Barcelona, that spoke English perfectly well.—How, for instance, shall a Frenchman who cannot pronounce the English, be able to understand (great as the difference is) what I mean, when I say the sun is an hour high? May he not equally suppose that I said the sun is in our eye?

XXX.

When you make an agreement with an Aubergiste where you intend to lie, take care to include beds, rooms, &c. or he will charge separately for these articles.

XXXI.

After all, it must be confessed, that Monf. Dessen's, à l' Hôtel d' Angleterre at Calais, is not only the first inn strangers of fashion generally go to, but that it is also the first and best inn in France. Dessen sein is the decoy-duck, and ought to have a salary from the French government—he is always sure of a good one from the English.

XXXII.

In frontier or garrison towns, where they have a right to examine your baggage, a twenty-four sols piece, and assuring the officer that you are a gentleman, and not a merchant, will carry you through without delay.

XXXIII.

Those who travel post should, before they set out, put up in parcels money for the number of horses they use for one post, two posts, and a post et demi, adding to each parcel that which is intended to be given to the driver or drivers, who are intitled by the king's ordonnance to five sols a post; and if they behave ill, they should be given no more: when they are civil ten or twelve sols a post is sufficient. If these

these packets are not prepared, and properly marked, the traveller, especially if he is not well acquainted with the money, cannot count it out while the horses are changing, from the number of beggars which surround the carriage, and who will take no denial.

XXXIV.

People of rank and condition, either going to, or coming from the continent, by writing to PETER FECTOR, Esq; at Dover, will find him a man of property and character, on whom they may depend.

XXXV.

Never let a Frenchman with whom you live, or with whom you travel, be master. An Englishman cannot possibly live twenty-four hours with a Frenchman who commands; he will try for that superiority; but by one single pointed resolution, shew him it must not be so, and he will give it it up, and become an useful, and an agreeable companion.

XXXVI.

Always carry a machine to secure the bedchamber doors at inns where you sleep, and see that there are no holes behind large pictures in the room, large enough for a man to creep through. Too much caution cannot be taken in a country where murder and robbery are, in a manner, synonymous terms.

LASTLY,

Valetudinarians, or men of a certain age, who travel into the southern parts of France, Spain, or Italy, should never omit to wear either a callico or fine flannel waistcoat under their shirts. Strange as it may seem to say so, this precaution is more necessary in the south of France, than in England. In May last it was so hot at Lyons, on the side of the streets the sun shone on, and so cold on the shady side, that that both were intolerable. The air is much more sharp and penetrating in hot climates than in cold. A dead dog, thrown into the streets of Madrid at night, will not have a bit of flesh upon his bones by eight o'clock the next morning; and that, as I am well assured, from the vifeness of the air alone; and if northern people will go thin clad, and contend with the natives, whose long experience ought to be considered, they cannot wonder if they are treated with contempt, especially where the error must be on the safest side; and they must take the consequences.

As to travelling in Spain, little need be said, after what has been inserted in the foregoing sheets; and, therefore, the general account of the country, and character of the people, may be pretty well conceived, by the following account of both:

Spain, then, is at this day a vast desert, inhabited by a grave, steady-appearing race
of

of men, which all their manners and actions, as well as discourse, seem to confirm; but they refuse the bountiful offers of nature, though she stretches out her arms to give it them in the most liberal manner. Perhaps their superstition, and the want of LIBERTY, renders it not worth receiving.

The soil of Spain is in general very fertile, and infinitely variegated, as to heat and cold, by the different aspect of mountains, or in the plains most distant from mountains. Their pastures are excellent, and their sheep numerous. Every climate, and every soil, may be found in this kingdom, and consequently every thing which man can ask of God, might be had there in perfection, were it not for the idle, inactive, slothful disposition of the natives; for they have in, and upon their soil, the riches of all other nations: but a bag of onions, a piece of bread, and a bunch

a bunch of grapes, is all that a Spaniard requires for his subsistence in twenty-four hours. There does not live a more abstemious race of men; but their country must, while they remain under their present laws and religion, continue uncultivated, and almost depopulated. They will not labour themselves, nor would they allow Philip III. to bring strangers among them who would! Their HONOUR was too much at stake in that respect, and their pride withholds their own hands. Add to this, their great number of religious houses filled with idle monks, who are of no more use to the public than dead men; for they consume, without adding to the state: had the Spaniards the industry of other nations, what a vast trade might they carry on with their neighbours in Africa! instead of which they hold with them a perpetual war. These considerations, with the multitude of offices; their incredible number of servants, their passion for bull-baiting and intriguing, employ all their attention. They are all, in their own imagination, from the king to the cobbler, men of too high birth to stoop to the earth, but to gather what she offers spontaneously: and the soil is well fitted to the inhabitants, or the inhabitants to the soil; perhaps, too, wisely so ordained by the MAKER OF BOTH. It certainly, however, is fortunate for this country, and perhaps to all their neighbouring nations; and therefore, though as a citizen of the world one cannot behold such a fine country without lamenting its neglected condition; yet, as a native of this, it ought to be a matter of triumph.

A P P E N D I X.

SINCE the Author of this Work returned to England, and the perspective view of the mountain of Montferrat was published, he sent the Holy Fathers of that monastery, through the hands of Pere Pascal, one of the best impressions. The following answer, from that very respectable community, is too flattering to him, not to be inserted in this second edition of of the work.

“ MUY S . MIO,

“ LA carta y estampa, q^e. V. S. se “ sirvio remitirme las recivi con todo mi “ aprecio y complacencia, por las pro-“ speras noticias de la perfecta salud de

“ V. S. y toda su familia; y por las muchas “ honrras q^c. sin merecerlas yo se digna “ dispensarme con tanta generosidad.— “ Debo asegurar a V. S. que toda esta “ comunidad dá los mayor elogios a la “ estampa, por su naturalidad, primor, y “ delicadez y por configui^{te}. que rinda a “ V. S. las mas repetidas gracias; y lo “ cumplo con mucho gusto.—En quanto
 “ al libro, como aqui no hay sugeto que “ entienda el ynglés, seria precisso arrin“ conarlo sin leerlo; y por q^c. esto nos “ seria a todos muy sensible; debo supp^{can}.
 “ a V. S. no tome el trabajo de remiterlo.
 “ Si logno la honrras a dicha de ver a V. S.
 “ con su familia en este monte, tendre la “ mayor alegria y complacencia.—El P.
 “ Tandre, aunq^c. muy indispuesto, rinde
 “ a V. S. los mayor^s. obsequios, y de mi “ parté se sirvirá V. S. recibir mio cor“ deules affectos; no omitiendo ponerme
 “ a la obed^a. de su f^{ra}. y demas familia; y “ quedo rog^{do}. a D^s. Gue, y profere dila“ tados,

“ tados, y felc,. as. la vida y salud, de “ V. S. y de toda su familia amada

“ Su obligado y rendido fiervo,

“ FR. PASQUAL RODRIGUEZ.”

Monferrat,
y Mayo 19d, 77.

I will not, for more reasons than one, give a literal translation of this good Father's letter ; but the substance of it is too flattering to me, not to be made known to you, and is nearly as follows,

WORTHY SIR,

THE letter and print which came inclosed to me, demand our warmest thanks; and it is with pleasure we hear of your health, and that of your worthy family. This whole community highly value the print on two accounts: First, for the excellent and delicate manner in which the work is executed; and secondly, for its strong resemblance of the place ; but as none of our fraternity understand English, the books would have been to us quite useless. We should be happy to see you and your good family once more on our mountain. Pere Tendre is at this time very much indisposed, but desires his respects. May all manner of felicity attend you and yours, for which I offer up my prayers, being with great esteem

Your obliged servant,

PERE PASQUAL RODRIGUO.

LETTER

L E T T E R L V I I I .

LYONS.

I Am so full of the wonders of MONT-SERRAT, and the religious inhabitants thereof, that I had almost forgot to tell you of my excursion to the celebrated convent DE CHARTREUX; yet those who have not visited the former, cannot see the latter, without being wonderfully delighted with the solitude and romantic situation of this noble and singularly situated convent: but the high, rude, and inaccessible rocks and mountains here, were not so striking and so wonderful to me, as they would be to you; every thing of this kind, must sink in the idea of one, who has visited the holy convent of Neustra Seniors de Montserrat: nevertheless, the solitude of the place, and the idea of the almost perpetual silence enjoined those religious people, impressed on my mind a kind of pleasing tranquillity, which such uncommon and rude sketches of nature must raise in the mind of a contemplative man; and especially when it is enforced, as it must be, by that first reflection, which must be always upper most, that the place is not only the habitation of men, sequestered from the world, to adore the Creator of it, but who, in order to bind their minds the more firmly towards that great Creator, are not permitted to employ even the gift of speech, but in addressing their prayers to him. The high mountains, the woods, the waterfalls, on all sides, and the silence of man, still heighten the scenes; and awaken in the mind, perhaps, as much true devotion, in those who visit this spot (whatever religion they profess), as it does in the holy order of men to whom it belongs. It is indeed a fit place to forget the world in, and consequently not to forget THAT WONDERFUL and INCOMPREHENSIBLE POWER,

POWER, BY WHICH THE WORLD AND ALL THINGS IN IT WERE MADE! This silent order of men are however very rich; but they cannot gratify their appetites nor passions the more on that account, being obliged by their vow never to eat flesh. Their house is of a plain and simple construction, consisting of a long range of cloysters, with a church and common eating hall but they never speak; but on Sundays and holidays: you may be sure therefore that men who eat so little, who live so free from care, and void of passion, live not only free from distempers, but to a great age. They amuse themselves however in various kinds of mechanical works; and except a few who have not any, or who have too much genius, they seem a happy set, we cannot say society, of men. They received me (for I could not take my family) very politely; and, as far as a maigre dinner would go, fed me plentifully. This convent is surrounded by a wood wood of three or four leagues on every side, and is in every respect well worthy of a visit by travellers who can taste nature's great outline; for it is the only spot in France a man can well visit, without meeting with hair-dressers, fiddlers, fops, petit maîtres, charlatans, and coxcombs. It is here alone an Englishman can have ocular and auricular proof, that a Frenchman can hold his tongue; walk without cutting capers; or, if he sees a lady, treat her with a specimen of a graceful step or two, by a bar of a minuet hummed by himself.

The Author has thought it right to extract the Five following Letters, published in the St. James's Chronicle, under the Signature of the Wanderer, as they contain some Information, if not Entertainment, not given in the First Edition.

L E T T E R L I X.

S I R,

IT has justly been observed, that by the laws of England there is more ceremony used to commit a suspected criminal to a gaol than to the wheel, or to the flames in other countries. The observation is certainly true, as to the commitment; but the hasty and indecent manner in which oaths are administered, and criminals tried and convicted, at the Old Bailey, and by the judges on the circuit, is very reprehensible; and even the laws of this country are more favourable to the accused

accused and innocent, perhaps because they are more terrible to the guilty; and the unjust and cruel sufferings of the Calas and Sirven families in France, have rendered a private calamity a public benefit: for if a minister of France (availing himself of the royal authority) confines an innocent citizen, he is obliged to pay the injured party two guineas for each hour he is deprived of liberty. How very cautious judges and juries should be not to condemn too hastily upon presumptive evidence, the following narration will evince.

A woman of the city of Lyons, returning to her house at eleven o'clock at night, and not finding her daughter, whom she had left in charge of it, after making a strict enquiry among her neighbours, at length accused one of them with having secreted the girl, for the purpose of prostitution. Sometime afterwards a fisherman took

took up a drowned female body from the Rhone, which, though much disfigured, the mother and all her neighbours concluded to be the lost child; and an enemy to the neighbour whom the mother had first suspected and accused of having secreted the young woman, persuaded the mother that her daughter had been ravished and strangled by that man, and thrown into the river. The poor woman gave credit to this surmise; she propagated the report; the whole town was alarmed, and called out for vengeance: but, in the midst of all this disturbance, a child of five years and a half old, son of the woman who had persuaded the poor mother of the guilt of her neighbour, accused his own mother of committing the murder. He asserted that his mother and five men held the deceased, while a sixth ravished her; he gave a circumstantial account of the actions of the assassins, the cries of the girl, and the manner in which they put her her

her to death! After which he said they threw her body into the well, then took it up again, wrapt it in a sheet, carried it out, and cast it into the river. The six persons accused were committed to prison, and secured with irons; for who could doubt the truth of a story so told, and by a child of so tender an age? Yet there was not a syllable of truth in what the child had asserted. No girl had been violated; no murder committed; no men had been assembled at the house! The child had been suborned by two other children, the children of the accusers: and the child of only five years and a half old had nearly brought his mother and six innocent men to the flames, for a handful of sugar plums with which he had been bribed, had not the judges wisely deferred the trial, till the understanding of the accuser was farther opened by age and good counsel. Had lord  tried these seven innocent persons, they might have have fallen victims to his ignorance. Had lord  tried them, they might have fallen victims to his impetuosity, or impatience for his dinner. But had lord Camden tried them, they would have been saved by his sagacity, patience, humanity, and love of justice. Such men only ought to be trusted with the lives and fortunes of their fellow creatures. Oh England! England! how art thou fallen! Art thou the kingdom so lately renowned throughout the world for its valour in war, its wisdom in councils, and its equitable decisions of justice?

L E T T E R L X.

S I R,

I Acquainted you in a former letter that I had visited the remains of the Roman city lately discovered on the Chatelet Mountain in Champagne, where I have since spent some days, and gratified my curiosity to the utmost, having seen every thing which has hitherto been dug up, or gathered from the refuse. Mons. Grinion (under whose direction the workmen employed by the king have acted) was so obliging, as to shew me an infinite number of curious pieces of antiquity, consisting of vases, statues, coins, Fibulae, keys, rings, weights, measures, lamps, Priapi, &c. forming many thousand different articles; all which put it past a doubt that it was a Roman town or city, which had either been pillaged and burnt
by

by an enemy, or destroyed by accidental fire; for as I walked over the broken ground, I picked up many pieces of glass which had been melted by the flames; nor could I move my feet without treading upon the fragments of broken utensils, made chiefly of a composition not much inferior to china; on many of which were beautiful foliages, flowers, &c. well erected; and upon one little vessel, which Monf. Grinion was so obliging to give me, the artist's name is distinctly impressed; and I find (to speak in the phrase of the country from whence I write) that Monf. Osprim was a very ingenious potter, and a Roman, who lived in a town, we know not when built, nor when destroyed, but most certainly how, i. e. by fire; and not (as has been insinuated in former accounts) by some violent convulsion of the earth; for the cellars, the steps leading into them, the wells, water troughs, &c. are all in the same form they were originally built, and the deepest of the caves not above six feet beneath the present surface of the mountain. I find that not above one-third part of the surface has been yet opened, and it is very evident that the greater part of the hill was covered with buildings; that part however which has been explored is supposed to have been the principal; if so, the streets were very narrow, and the best houses but small, and yet the situation was such, that nothing could be more beautiful than the country and prospect which the hill commands, the base of which is now, and probably was then, surrounded by a plantation of grapes, which produce the most delicious of wines.

If I am not mistaken, I think the weights of the Romans have not been certainly ascertained; if so, that matter may now be settled beyond a doubt; for weights of all sizes have been taken up here, as perfect as when they were brought there; as well as a wine measure, found in the house (as Monf. Grinion expressed it) of an aubergiste.

I cannot

I cannot conclude this account, without relating a laughable circumstance, which occurred during the time Monf. Grinion the younger was shewing me the cabinet of curiosities; because it conveys with it a trait of the genius, manners, and customs, of the present as well as former inhabitants of this country. Just at the time he was shewing me a monstrous Priapus, which had been found among the refuse of the buildings, a young French lady came into the apartment; and Monf. Grinion smiling at me, laid it by with great propriety and decency, yet with such a look, as excited the lady's curiosity, and she insisted upon seeing and knowing what it was; it would be impossible for me to explain in my language (even if it were proper) the delicate manner in which Monf. Grinion, who is a sprightly young man, satisfied the lady's curiosity in his; she instantly burst into laughter, and lifting up her hands, exclaimed, Ob, mon Dieu!—I could not therefore help telling her, that though the ladies of my country were of a different religion from those of hers, yet they would all claim a share with her, in what she seemed to announce as her own. This produced another laugh, a basket of fine fruit, and a bottle of excellent burgundy; and after thanking Monf. Grinion for gratifying all my senses so highly, I took my leave of him; and after spending a few hours every day in raking among the rubbish, and finding a few trifling things, valuable only for being the work of men who lived so many ages since, I departed from that delightful spot, and pursued my journey.

P. S. When I enquired why the workmen who had been employed in opening the foundation of this ancient town were dismissed, I was told—for want of money. But surely a king of France might rather be accused of want of curiosity.

L E T T E R

L E T T E R LXI.

S I R,

NISMES.

BEING just returned from Touloufe, where I have been with two wanderers like myself, who came here to see, and not to make the show, I shall give you some account of a most extraordinary assembly of ladies and gentlemen whom we had the honour to be introduced to at the convent of Cordeliers; an assembly which I assure you gave me more pleasure than any other I have been introduced to, either in Spain or France. It consisted of about fourscore personages, dressed without any of the borrowed hair, paint, greafe, or pomatum, which compose so great a part of modern adornments; in short, they were all in plain buff, and without any other covering than that which they brought into the world. Those people (if we may believe the holy man who introduced us) were inhabitants of Toulouse above five hundred years ago; and their dead bodies, by some partial virtue of that very spot wherein they were buried, have remained to this day uncorrupted! And now, that they are taken from their graves, and placed upon their feet against the walls of this holy house, they serve as a striking memento of what man was, is, and will be; and, as Sir Walter Raleigh justly observes, it is death, and the approach of death alone, which can teach man to know what a contemptible being he is, and that after all his strutting and importance, he must finish the scene with these two narrow words—Hic jacet. But I have wandered from my subject; for I meant to tell you that one of the ladies I was introduced to, was the mistress of a count of Toulouse, whose beauty (though she was only a baker's daughter) acquired her the name of

La

La belle Paule. Unfortunately her body is broke in two, by being brought out of her company to be shewn to Louis XIV. when he passed through that city; and though she lived about five hundred years ago, her beauty is not absolutely impaired; it is indeed very extraordinary that the body, flesh, and features (for some are very perfect) should have remained uncorrupted to this day, nay the countenances of many are quite complete; I cannot believe they are bodies which were originally buried there, but rather procured from Egypt (or some climate better disposed to preserve flesh from corruption) by the artifice of the priests. It is certain, however, that they are the bodies of men who died some centuries ago, and prove that, without the art of embalming, dead bodies may be long well preserved. Toulouse contains many other things worthy the notice of a traveller, but these are well known; and my stay was too short there to see much of what is called good company, or the belle Chose; the belle Paule captivated me most: but as my visit was chiefly made to the dead, I could not help visiting the garden where the late Colonel Forrester's body was interred; but I found, instead of the two usual words, Hic jacet, nothing but an old cabbage stump over the body of the Author of the Polite Philosopher, the governor of Belleisle, the tutor to a noble marquis, and a gentleman who had so beautiful an ear, that, as I heard him assure some ladies (to whom he shewed it after he was turned of sixty), he sat for it to an eminent statuary at Rome; so that if Toulouse does not preserve his entire body, Rome possesses the ear of the Polite Philosopher.

LETTER

L E T T E R L X I I .

S I R,

N I S M E S .

TH E general idea in England is, I believe, that the South of France is not only the cheapest part of this kingdom, but the cheapest part of Europe also. It may be right therefore to advertise such frugal travellers as myself, that they will find it far otherwise, and in every article (wine excepted) much dearer than the northern parts, nay much dearer than even England.

If it be asked, how an opinion so contrary to what is the truth came to be so generally believed on your side the water; I answer, that I suppose, after so many protestants had manured the lands of Languedoc with their blood, and so many others escaped the same fate by flight, during during their persecution, and the civil war in Louis XIV.'s time, the fruits of the earth were cheap in proportion to the few there were to partake of them. At this time, however, the populousness of the kingdom in general, and of this part of France in particular, is wonderful, and therefore accounts very well for the high price of provisions.

A French gentleman, well acquainted with the constitution of his country, told me above eight years since, that France increased so rapidly in peace, that they must necessarily have a war every twelve or fourteen years, to carry off the refuse of the people. That period is now near expired, and the vigorous measures taken by the present ministry of France to render the kingdom as mighty as it is extensive, indicates something very like war. They are too wise to quarrel with England, however, while they are weak enough to quarrel with with

with one another. The minister told the king the other day, that he is only the fourth king in Europe; adding, that he would soon make him the first. I do not know who those kings are he gave the precedence to, but I believe the king of England was not considered as the first.

The war of the minister now carrying on against the American rebels, has lowered England in the opinion of all Europe; and they think it too far gone to bring about a reconciliation, even if the general congress accepted the minister's propositions, or the minister theirs. There is nothing which so whets the spirits of men, and shakes the foundation of any civil constitution, or produces tyranny so effectually, as a civil war. When the common people of America, who having nothing to lose but that liberty they now contend for, have succeeded (as they undoubtedly will), perhaps they may then think of trying

trying what they can do towards obtaining a little property.

When nation and nation contend in warfare, the individuals, not knowing each other, have no personal hate to each other when the conflict is over. The soldiers on both sides are by art and address made to dislike an individual whose troops they encounter, while the real object of their resentment is out of danger.

During the late war, and while our troops were landed at Belleisle, the French and English centinels were placed so near each other, that they every day entered into a friendly traffick; the Frenchman had good brandy, the Englishman good bread; and every time they were relieved at their several posts, you might see the Frenchman hold up his bait of brandy, the Englishman return the signal by elevating his loaf: they both advanced, and without

without speaking a word, carried on a friendly intercourse, which their mutual wants invited them to. But it is not so with a rebel American and the British foldier.

Sylla, not content with having slaughtered above seventy thousand men when he entered Rome, ordered afterwards several thousand citizens to be massacred who were unarmed, beside other carnages committed in private houses, by his men, at their pleasure; and Sylla's cruelty had not stopped there, but for the advice of Fufidius: "Let some live (said he), else you will have none left to domineer over." Romans and Britons are made of the same materials, and the same passions and prejudices will appear and be put in practice by the victorious party at the conclusion of all civil wars. At Rome the shedding of blood was not all; some of their most illustrious men were torn limb from limb, others others had their eyes put out, and their arms and legs rent from their living trunks, and exposed as a show. Something like this, I fear, will finish the ministerial war in America.

L E T T E R LXIII.

S I R,

PARIS.

IT is customary to announce the arrival at the capital of great men, especially after long absence on their travels into outlandish countries; for this reason I desire you will inform the world—yes, the world—that after eight years absence, and fourteen months wandering, I am arrived, in good health and tolerable spirits, at this city, the source of all fashions, follies, and vices, from whence they flow to every part of Europe; I will not say to America, because I think the British ministry did not embark with their other merchandize any of those commodities in the last fleet fitted out for that land of rebels.

I find very little alteration in Paris since I was last here, excepting that eight years wear

wear of the irregular pavé in these narrow dirty streets, has made the stones a good deal smoother; a matter of great consequence to those who, like me, walk a good deal upon tender bottoms; and that every article of life is one third dearer to Frenchmen than it was eight years ago, and more than double to strangers and Englishmen. I cannot, for example, keep my horse in Paris for less than four shillings a day, and that too at a short allowance; ten pounds of bad hay cost eighteen sols. Butter is twenty-four sols a pound, and every other article equally dear, as well as dirty. But I did not mean at this time to give you any other account of Paris than the very important one of my safe arrival; for indeed you had like to have lost your poor Wanderer the very day before he came here, and I will tell you how. It was a great fair, but a foul day, when I left Fontainebleau; and while I was passing through the fine forest, which every way surrounds that royal

royal palace, such a storm of thunder, lightning, and rain overtook us, that, as the saying is, I thought heaven and earth were coming together; for I saw several trees shivered to pieces, and found one man, and his horse too, upon the road, as dead as door nails: at length, however, I got to Effoine, and just after I had housed my horse, my dog, my parrot, my monkey, and my wife, and, like poor Matthew Green, had placed myself to “ Sit in window dry as ark,

“ And on the drowning world remark,”

up came a post-chaise, containing a pretty English woman, accompanied by a male and female servant; when I heard a consultation about the propriety of stopping, or proceeding to Paris that night. As I perceived they were not so weather-wise as myself, and that the storm which had abated a little was collecting again, I stepped down, and with my best address, and a new acquired French bow, told my pretty country woman (for pretty she is, in spite of a carotty pate and a turnep complexion) that the storm was coming on again, and that she had better avail herself of the security which that inn afforded, than proceed farther; but instead of a civil answer for my wet head (for I stood in the rain, and uncovered, because I heard the servants say, Yes, my lady—and, No, my lady—and, To be sure, my lady, &c.) her ladyship honoured me only with a silent look of indignant contempt, as much as to say, Mind your monkey, your parrot, and your wife, and do not give your unasked vorde to other folks; so I took her answer, and you may be sure I retired a little ashamed of myself, and a little ashamed for other folks. I was glad, however, to see the storm come down, and my lady come in; for, as Swift says, “ ———much rather I should die,

 “ Than their prediction prove a lie.”

Now

Now do you think I had not some curiosity to know my lady's real name? To tell you the truth, I had a deadly one, and therefore employed a twelve fol piece, and bribed a pretty brunette to found Archer upon that subject, who at length informed me, that it was Meledi Marquette. This name I could no other way translate into English than into Lady Margaret. But Lady Margaret who? There lay the difficulty! It cannot, said I, be the wife of the broken Scotch b——r, travelling at the rate of five pounds a day, whose husband lately swore himself not worth five pounds in the world; nor could she, if it were, said I, have treated a countryman with such silent contempt, lest he might have been a sufferer, or a signer of her husband's certificate. In short, I was obliged to be content with only knowing that I was under the same roof, during a dreadful storm, with my Lady Marquette Somebody. So the next morning I did myself the honour to accompany her Ladyship into Paris, keeping (for I drove to an inch all the way) my plebeian distance; and having weathered one night's storm with her Ladyship, and travelled part of one day, I thought I might venture to take up Paris quarters also in the same hotel; and as no stranger can be permitted to sleep in Paris till they have put their name into the porter's book, I found that Meledi Marquette Quatre-dice arrived at Paris the same day.

P. S. As Mr. Gainsborough has been some years in possession of her Ladyship's best play of features, I recommend it strongly to her to fetch them home, and study, from his art, the art of pleasing. Her husband's picture will be a sufficient reward to Mr. Gainsborough for having painted them both.

The Harangue of the Emperor CLAUDIUS, in the SENATE. Copied from the original Bronze plate, in the Hotel de Ville of Lyons.

FIRST TABLE.

MÆRERUMN.OSTR::::::SII:::::: Equidem · primum · omnium · illam cogitationem · hominum · quam · maxime · prinam · occurfuram · mihi · provideo · deprecor ne · quasi · novam · istam · rem · introduci · exhorrescatis · sed · illa · potius · cogitetis · quam · multa · in · hac · civitate · novata · sint · et · quidem · statim · ab · origine · vrbis · nostræ · in · quod · formas · statufque · res · P · nostra · diducta · sit.

Quondam · reges · hanc · tenuere · vrbem · nec
tamen · domesticis · successoribus · eam · tradere contigit · supervenere · alieni · et · quidam · externi · vt · Numa · Romulo · succefferit · ex · Sabinis · veniens · vicinus · quidem · se · tunc.

Sed

Sed tunc externus ut Anco Marcio Prifcus Tarquinius propter temeratum sanguinem quod Patre Demaratho Corinthio natus erat et Tarquiniensi Matre generoso sed inopi ut quæ tali marito necesse habuerit succumbere cum domi repelleretur A. gendis honoribus postquam Roman migravit regnum adeptus est huic quoque et filio nepotivæ ejus nam et hoc inter auctores difcrepat infertus Servius Tullius si nostros fequimur captiva natus orefia fitufcos cœli quondam vivennæ fodalif fideliffimus omnisque ejus cafus comes postquam varia fortuna exactus cum omnibus reliquis cæliani exercitus Etruria excepit montem cœlium occupavit et a duce fuo cœlio ita appellatus mutatoque nomine nam Tufce mostrana ei nomen erat ita appellatus est ut dixi et regnum fumma cum rei p. utilitate optinuit deinde postquam Tarquini superbi mores invifi civitati noftræ effe cœperunt qua ipfius qua filiorum ejus nempe pertæfum est mentes regni et ad confules.

Annuos magistratus administratio rei p translata est quid nunc commemorem dic tatur valentius repertum apud majores nostros quo in asperioribus bellis aut in civili mo tu difficiliore uterentur aut in auxilium ple bis creatos tribunos plebei quid al latum imperium solutoque postea Decemvirali regno ad consules rursus reditum quid in decuris distributum consulare imperium tri bunosque militum consulari imperio appel latus qui seni et sæpe octoni crearentur quid communicatos postremo cum plebe honores non imperi solum sed sacerdotiorum quo que jam si NARRIUM bella p quibus cœperint majores nostri et quo processerimus vereor ne nimio insolentior esse videar et quæsisse jactationem gloria prolati imperi ultra oce anum sed illoc potius revertor civitatem.

SECOND TABLE.

: : : : : : : : : : : : : : : : : SANE
 : : : NOVO : : DIVVS : : AUG : : : LVS.
 et Patrius Ti Cæsar omnem florem urbisque coloniarum

coloniarum ac municipiorum bonorum scilicet virorum et locupletium in hac curia esse voluit quid ergo non Italicus fenator Provinciali potior est jam vobis cum hanc partem censuræ meæ ad probare cœpero quid de ea sentiam rebus ostendam sed ne Provinciales quidem si modo ornare curiam poterint rejiciendos puto

Ornatissima ecce colonia volentissimaque Viennensium quam longo jam tempore senatores huic curiæ confert ex qua colonia inter paucos equestris ordinis ornamentum L. Vestinum familiarissime dillego hodieque in rebus meis detineo cujus liberi tiorum gradu post modo cum annis promoturi dignitatis suæ incrementa ut dirum nomen latronis taceam et odi illud palæstricum prodigium quod ante in domum consulatum intulit quam colonia sua solidum civitatis Romanæ beneficium consecuta est idem de patre ejus possum dicere miserabili quidem inutilis fenator esse non possit tempus est jam TI. CÆSAR Germanice detegere te patribus

patribus· conscriptis · quo· tendat· oratio· tua· jam· enim· ad· extremos· fines· Galliæ· Narbo-nensis· venisti.

Tot· ecce· insignes· juvenes· quot· intueor· non· magis· sunt· pœnitendi· fenatores· quam· pœnitet· Perficum· nobilissimum· virum· ami-cum· meum· inter· imagines· majorum· suorum· Allobrogici· nomen· legere· quod· s. l.
hæc· ita· esse· consentitis· quid· ultra· desidera-tis· quam· ut· vobis· digito· demonstrem· solum ipsum· ultra· fines· provinciæ· Narbonensis· jam· vobis· fenatores· mittere· quando· ex· Luguduno· habere· nos· nostri· ordinis· viros· non pœnitet· timide· quidem· P· C· vobis· provin-ciarum· terminos· sum· sed· descripte· jam· co-mata· Galliæ· causa· agenda· est· in· qua· si· quis· hoc· intuetur· quod· bello· per· decem· anno· exercuerunt· divom· Julium· diem· opponat· centum· annorum· immobilem· fidem obsequiumque· multis· trepidis· rebus· nostros plusquam· expertum· illi· patri· meo· Druso· Germaniam· sub· genti· tutam· quiete· sua· securamque· a· tergo· pacem· præstiterunt· et·

Y

quidem

quidem·cum·AD·census·novo·tum·opere·et in·adfueto·Gallis·ad·bellum·avocatus·effet· quod·opus·quam·arduum·fit·nobis·nunc·maxime·quam·vis·nihil·ultra·quam·ut·publice notæ·sint·facultates·nostræ·exquiratur·nimis·magno·experimento·cognoscimus.

The above harangue, made by CLAU-DIUS, in favour of the LYONNOIS, and which he pronounced in the Senate, are the only remains of the works of this Emperor, though he composed many. Suetonius says he composed forty-three books of a history, and left eight complete of his own life; and adds, that he wrote more elegantly than judiciously.

POSTSCRIPT from CALAIS.

S I R,

I Found in this town, the very sink of France, and the asylum of whores and rogues from England, a groupe of English men and women, than which nothing can be more extraordinary; at the head of which presides L——y B——l, the Yorkshire fellow, called King Collins, Messrs. Dry——er, and L——es, a Canterbury alderman, a fellow who ran away with the pauper's money from Bristol, and twenty other geniuses,

Whose necks are protected from the stretch of a halter,
By twenty one miles of Gallic salt water.

I could moralise here a little, instead of dogarising.—To what a state of low life and misery is one of the most agreeable women of this country fallen! Even titles, and riches in abundance, have not been sufficient to keep a certain lady, once the intimate companion of a princess, from becoming becoming even contemptible in the eyes of two nations, and in one (such is her penury and meanness) that even fish women deride and scoff at her; she has been even turned out of one of the best inns of France, for actions of so mean a cast that a French charlatan would blush to be charged with! Let this wholesome lesson however be drawn from it—that it is the will of GOD, to shew mankind with what contempt they should look upon riches and honours, unless they can be obtained by virtuous actions.

F I N I S.

University of California
SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY Return this material to the library from which it was borrowed.

REC'D LD-URC

JUL 26 1988

"REC'D LD-URC"
OCT 07 1991
APR 08 1992

Biomedical Library
OCT 19 1998

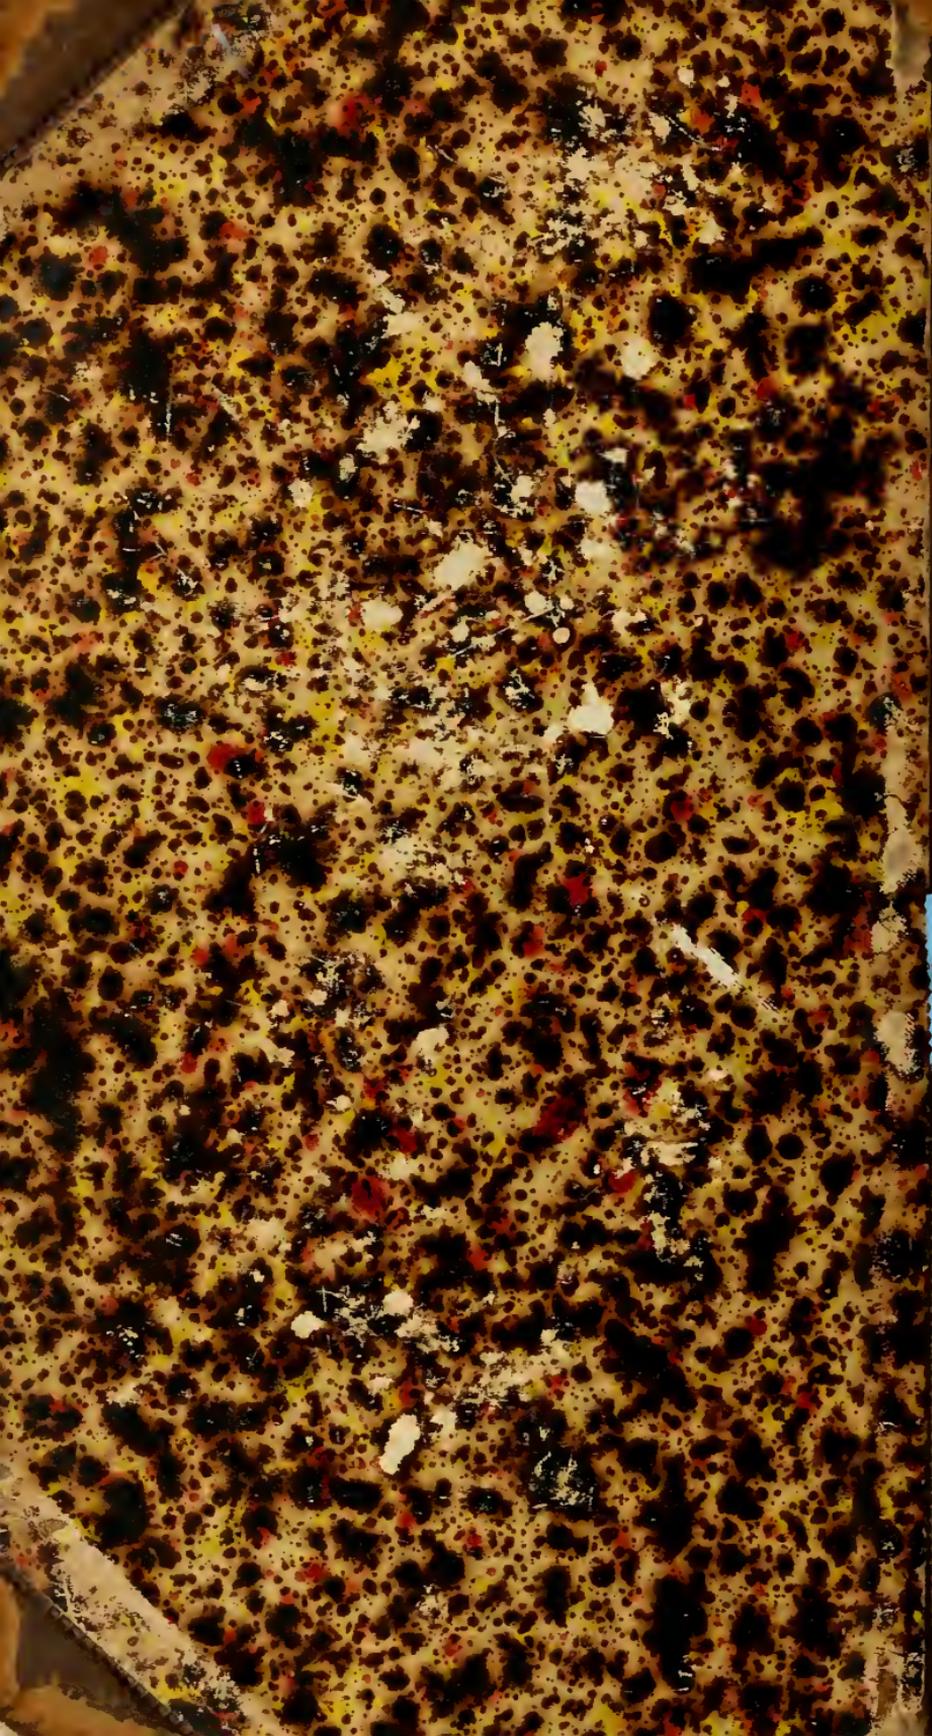

RECEIVED
OCT 19 1998

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

A 000 006 584 7

DC 25
T34y 1789
v.2

UNIV

REGI